About this issue

By the time this arrives, Ann and I will be living in the Dominican Republic, preparing to lead two Study-Service Term groups in that Latin American country.

While still in Goshen, we met twice with the 20 students in our first unit, hoping to provide some orientation before they boarded the plane bound for their new temporary home. They wanted to know about bathing facilities and transportation. They sighed when we confirmed that many of their families would speak only Spanish. They asked whether the country was as oppressively hot as other students had indicated. They gulped when we said that they would be moving in with their families less than 24 hours after arriving on the Caribbean island. They wondered about the journals they would keep, the daily record of perceptions and observations and emotions.

We wondered, too, how they and we would change as a result of our cross-cultural experience. Even as you read, we are learning firsthand about the breadth and depth of our world. We're seeing God at work in the Dominican people. We're encountering poverty in measures we've never known. In subtle or striking ways, we will be different people when we return.

In this issue of Bulletin, we examine the impact SST has on students, looking through the eyes of Norm Kauffmann, Goshen College's dean of students, and Barb Nickel, a recent graduate now serving in Puerto Rico.

Nickel writes that her months of learning in German Democratic Republic exceeded her narrow expectations and changed her definitions of cultural awareness. Kauffmann, who has researched SST's impact for a book he is co-authoring, says SST represents a new educational model: a new way of knowing, teaching and learning. ''Engagement (in another culture) is a way of knowing that transforms the way students think and behave,'' he writes.

Over 20 years, SST has provided that opportunity for about 4,500 Goshen students. Now, together with the students, we're delightfully immersing ourselves in this transformative experience.

Studying abroad

Impact on students varies, depending on maturity, immersion

By Norman Kauffmann

From 1980 to 1982, I carried out initial research on the impact of the Study-Service Term on Goshen College students. Last year I was granted a sabbatical leave to work with Henry Weaver of the University of California and Judith Martin of the University of Minnesota to expand this initial work. The essence of my findings is reported and illustrated in this article.

For some students, SST fosters a significant personal change, while for others different changes take place. It appears that those students who are not as developmentally mature before SST but have meaningful contact with the culture reflect greater personal growth than those who are more advanced before going on SST. However, developmentally advanced students report greater change in their cultural understandings and appreciation for the other culture's values. Less mature students who have only superficial contact with their SST culture report minimal change in both global awareness and personal maturation. The stories of five students interviewed in February 1988 will illustrate these findings.

Don, who came from an upper-middle-class family, went on SST in his junior year after struggling for two years to find other ways of working out his international-education requirements. He was an insecure person who was uncertain about life direction and fairly ethnocentric, but said SST in Costa Rica profoundly changed his life.

Don's host families accepted him openly, not basing their acceptance on his wealth or academic record, the standards of self-worth he found in the United States. Consequently he was drawn into relationships and became much more outgoing and self-confident. Also, before going to Costa Rica his view of success was ''to make as much money as possible,'' but he realized on SST that he can live happily without great material resources.

Although Don's career path is still uncertain, his motivation to study increased dramatically. After returning, he received his first straight-A report card of his college years. In addition, instead of avoiding language study, he planned to take more Spanish courses, even though the language was difficult for him.

Scott Lightfoot '86, a communication major now living in Fremont, Ohio, enjoys a sunny day in Haiti during the 1985 winter trimester. The following year, SST students in that country were moved to Jamaica because of Haiti's political unrest.

While Mike was developmentally further along than Don, he also lacked self-confidence and had spent his first two years at Goshen grappling with issues of identity and life direction. These issues were far from resolved at the time he departed for Jena, German Democratic Republic.

"The biggest change that I made as a result of SST was that I grew up," Mike said. "I gained vision inside and outside of myself. I have the ability to progress, and I won't have to be stuck in one place the rest of my life."

While Don and Mike both reported changes in personal growth and maturation, they both believed that another experience abroad would allow for much more growth because they were now mature enough to be immersed in another culture. "Now that I have gained this understanding, I would make more contacts and I would push myself harder," said Mike. "I have moved beyond survival and would be ready to move into a deeper involvement in the culture."

While Don and Mike did report some change in global awareness and understanding, the magnitude of change was not as great as it was for Margarita. Margarita was secure and self-confident in a way that freed her to immerse herself in the host culture. Her previous experience in Haiti helped her gain the insight she needed to enter the Chinese culture.

Margarita's interest in art drew her into a friendship with a Chinese artist who became a significant cultural bridge for her. "Art was the medium which facilitated my immersion into the Chinese culture," she said. She talked about her resistance to the Chinese approach to painting because it seemed so antithetical to what is central to the creative process. After about two months in China, she realized that she was judging her experience through the eyes of Western culture. "I began to realize that I had to leave behind my Western concept of art to be able to understand theirs."

Once she had broadened her perspective, making room for this approach to art, she was more prepared to be involved with the Chinese students she taught each day as part of her service assignment. "Only after four months did I start to understand, because it takes awhile to get rid of preconceived ideas," said Margarita. "Once I was willing to accept other perspectives, I could understand a great deal more of the total culture."

SST was less than a positive experience for Lori, who reported little change in personal development or global awareness. "It takes me longer to get used to surroundings and adjust than the average person," she said.

"I felt a lot of negative things when I was there. I felt guilty about that because I had heard that SST was supposed to be the most wonderful thing in the world,'' said Lori. ''I was disappointed that it was so much harder than I thought it would be. Some situations I can adjust to rather easily, but when they are off-the-wall I just go wacko. That SST experience was pretty much off-the-wall.''

In spite of Lori's perception that she did not change significantly, she demonstrated the most insight of all 17 students interviewed about why some, like her, do not have high-quality contacts in the culture and as a consequence report less change. While several factors affect the depth of contact with the host culture (level of maturity before departure, length of stay) the single greatest factor from her viewpoint is the ability to communicate. Communication, however, is not simply a matter of knowing the language fluently. She described students who knew the language well but still couldn't communicate. Others didn't know the language much at all but could communicate in such a way that they made many close friends and were immersed deeply into the culture.

Personal change and re-entry

For some students, re-entry was no problem. Most students, however, expressed some difficulty in re-entering the North American culture. Generally, the more the student was immersed in the host culture, the more difficult the re-entry. Those who had negative experiences and were only superficially involved with the culture abroad found re-entry fairly simple.

Those who became immersed found re-entry more difficult. Some experienced alienation from family and close friends because they were not the people they were when they left. A number of these reacted negatively to their home culture, rejecting its attitudes, values, beliefs and behavior patterns. Acceptance of the changes by both the student and others was the key to healthy readjustment. Students who attempted to squelch the changes, or who felt pressure to revert back to who they were before the experience, had more difficulty adjusting than those who were allowed to incorporate their changes.

Don said his re-entry was rocky, noting that he was constantly irritable and in a bad mood. In addition to the contrast in pace of life, he also missed the close ties he felt with his Costa Rican family and culture. ''My natural family wanted me to be the person I was before I left,'' he said. "They were not really accepting me as I was in the way I had changed. That was disconcerting.

"I remember people making remarks like, 'What has happened to you? You have really changed a lot.' Yes, I had, but that negative connotation was really a thorn in my side. I wished they could have celebrated with me the changes I had made."

Upon Denise's return from China, her family and friends assisted her with re-entry shock. "In my confusion I was glad I could be with my family, people who knew me, cared for me and allowed me to adjust to things," said Denise. "They allowed me to be who I was as a changed person. They didn't have expectations of how I should act.

"It did take me awhile to get back into the swing of it. The things that I thought would be difficult, like food and clothes, weren't really the problem. The things that were difficult were absolutes and dogmas based on the Western mentality and world view. I could relate to that kind of conversation and conviction very well, but I now knew that view wasn't the only way of looking at things."

SST: The forerunner of a new educational model

In a recent paper, three scholars discussed the emergence of a new educational model that suggests fundamental changes in the way meaning is made (G.D. Kuh, E.J. Whitt and J.D. Shedd, "2001: A Paradigmatic Odyssey," 1987). They contend that since the beginning of recorded history, fewer than half a dozen world views (a description of what is and how it is) have been documented.

Thinkers and writers in many fields, including physics, psychology, organizational behavior and literature, are now suggesting that the conventional educational model, based on the world view introduced by Copernicus and Galileo, has begun to unravel. One of the characteristics of this transition is a shift from a world view that is relatively mechanistic to one that is much more subtle, complex and relational — one in which behavior has multiple meanings.

Educator Parker J. Palmer says that it is the very way of knowing that needs to be fundamentally altered if there is to be a shift in an educational model which more adequately reflects this new emerging world view. He asserts that the way we know and learn has implications for the way we live. Objectivism, according to him, distances the knower from the world. "It translates to an ethic of competitive individualism in the midst of a world fragmented and made exploitable by the very mode of knowing," says Palmer.

The author calls for another way of knowing which is more communal — one that has a capacity for relatedness between and beyond people, relatedness not only with people but also with events in history, nature, the world of ideas and the things of the Spirit.

Old Testament scholar Walter Brueggemann, reflecting on individual personal development, says that changes come about through discontinuity, displacement and disjunction. Disclosure (new insights, revelation) happens at points of disjunction, not in situations of equilibrium. "Personal development is never merely about interiority but always interaction in which the person is evoked, assaulted and impinged upon in formative and transformative ways," says Brueggemann.

For Goshen College, SST represents this new educational model: it is a new way of knowing, teaching and learning. The students who experience SST as it is meant to be are more than superficially involved in another culture and cannot separate academic learning from personal growth. Involvement in the culture draws students in. Engagement is a way of knowing that transforms the way students think and behave.

This new knowledge, a changed world view, cannot be held at arm's length, divorced from their personal lives. Immersion will not permit students to be only spectators in a world in which they live.

The questions that remain are: How can this new educational model be more fully implemented on our campus? In what new ways can students be more drawn in and fundamentally changed as a result of their work on campus? That is the challenge that lies ahead of us.

Norman Kauffmann is dean of student development and associate professor of psychology at Goshen College. Norman and his wife Sharon led SST units in Honduras in 1974-75 and 1984.

Reflections

Very un-GC these Latins,
No rush, no hang-ups.
They had a preposterous habit of smiling and saying hello.
We were abashed.
But their smiles
led to strange discoveries.
History is people . . . now:
children's hospitals, fiestas, private tutoring.
The old words — study, lectures — shed their pressured skins.
We felt the throb
of the world-wide tribe.
Jamaican dance confronted handbook rules.

Study Service Trimester launched us into Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Guadeloupe,
Honduras, Jamaica.
From maple leaves to palm leaves,
the first SST abroad:
GC campus complete with crowded markets, beaches, volcanoes.

We were a core group facing a new world together, and slowly
becoming part of that world.
We stumbled into a new language and we found a brother named Ramón and Pierre.

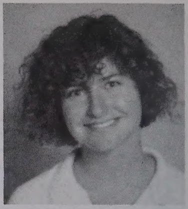
Teacher anticipates lifetime of crossing borders



By Barbara K. Nickel

I crossed the border to the German Democratic Republic (GDR) in May 1987, expecting to meet new people, improve my German and gain some understanding of an Eastern bloc country. During the next three months my learnings exceeded those narrow expectations and changed my definition of cultural awareness.

I didn't expect to meet Tante Liesbeth. During World War II, she had fled from her Mennonite community in Danzig to the GDR. She knew of my grandfather, who was also born in Danzig, as well as my aunts and uncles and my great-grandmother. We discovered that she was also the aunt of my great-aunt.

One day I traveled to Halle, a city about two hours from Jena, and spent an afternoon with Tante Liesbeth in Halle's Pizza Buffet. She told me about Danzig and the life she had known before fleeing to the East. Then we slowly walked through the streets of Halle and I learned of her present life, the adjustments she had made and the loneliness she often felt living in the new urbanization area on the outskirts of town. Tante's stories helped me sharpen my awareness of where I had come from and where I fit in relation to her and other relatives at home.

Later, at an English-German conversation meeting, I met Christine, who invited me to her home. Gradually I grew to trust her and looked forward to our excursions together. One day I waited for her across the street from the building where she worked. She saw me, motioned for me to follow and almost ran through the streets to the bus. Later she explained that her friendship with me must be a secret. If anyone from work or the university discovered that she was associating with someone from the West, both her and her father's jobs and future opportunities would be jeopardized.

Near the end of my stay in Jena I met Kasten, who had long hair and wore cut-off jeans and round, wire-rim glasses. He led a group of youth whose goal was to seek freedom of expression in GDR society. Most of his friends had been sent to West Berlin in 1981 as the result of a massive protest against Soviet missiles. He and the rest of the group were known as troublemakers and watched closely. But he talked freely to me about events in the group's past as well as present projects aimed at initiating change. The spontaneous and creative character of this group broadened my previous perceptions of Eastern society.

I saw unexpected contrasts in the various places we visited on our excursions. One Wednesday we traveled to Weimar, where we saw the house where Goethe had worked and lived, including his original workroom and poetry manuscripts. That afternoon, a few miles outside of the city, we saw the site of the Nazi concentration camp Buchenwald. In my journal entry that evening I contrasted the pride and the shame, the life and the death, realizing that an understanding of Germany's past was first needed in order to fully understand present realities.

SST provided a cell in which I could process the three-month maze of relationships, places and languages. This proved to be one of the most effective educational environments I have ever experienced. I remember late nights in our dormitory rooms discussing what was happening to us and around us. My understandings were broadened in this setting, for after three years of rushing to meet deadlines, I finally had time to talk about what I was learning.

I sometimes felt that I could not bear the confines of the group. Yet I was forced to bear them, and it was at these times that I had to reach within my own experience for ways to cross barriers in understanding. It was the people I had trouble understanding who finally helped me learn more about myself. Through sometimes painful times of confrontation I discovered distinct patterns in my own life that I had never previously identified. I could then see more clearly how my patterns could merge more successfully with the patterns of someone else. I realized that listening and looking for another's pattern was at the foundation of cultural understanding.

I emerged from SST hoping that what had happened to me would continue the following year on campus. Yet in my senior year the importance of continuing language study faded. Relationships with many SSTers consisted more of nostalgia and memories than the ongoing process of converged patterns I had hoped for. I sat in library carrels and at computer terminals and wondered what had gone wrong. My box of SST souvenirs lay untouched in the attic storage room.

Last summer I took Goshen's Teaching English as a Second Language course and found the opportunity to teach English in another culture. While deliberating the decision, I thought again of SST. It was a jumbled collage of faces, bus tickets, old castles and verb conjugations. Nothing was clear, except the feeling that although the individual people, places and language of SST had faded somewhat, my altered perception of cultural awareness had not. I knew that I wanted the SST processes of listening and looking to continue.

Now in Puerto Rico I'm fumbling with a new language again, but this one is more difficult because I didn't grow up hearing my grandparents speak it. When I return home after an exhausting day, no roommate is waiting for me with a warm pot of German noodles and a listening ear.

But I'm meeting new people and encountering cultural differences, experiencing excitement and adventure as well as intense frustration. This cross-cultural encounter probably will not be my last. I anticipate a lifetime of crossing borders into the east and west, north and south of another's understanding and experience.

A 1988 GC graduate, Barbara K. Nickel is teaching English as a second language and English literature at Academia Menonita Betania in Aibonito, Puerto Rico.

Bryanna Elizabeth Eickhoff, five-month-old daughter of Eric and Rebecca Zellner Eickhoff, 211 S. 8th St., Goshen, Oct. 5.

Births

Robert and Beth Gerig Bontrager, Harrisonburg, Va., Jesse Gerig, Sept. 8.

John '84 and Martha Miller Yoder, Goshen, Tori Marie, Nov. 3.

Note

Kenneth Madison, Fort Knox, Ky., is serving as chaplain on active duty for the Army. He formerly was pastor of First Brethren Church in Kokomo, Ind.

Board member authors book on economy

Jim Halteman '66, a member of the Goshen College Board of Overseers, is author of Market Capitalism and Christianity, published by Baker Book House Co., Grand Rapids, Mich. In his book, Halteman defines market capitalism and discusses how Christians should behave in the economic sphere.

Halteman writes so that Christians can understand, critique and better inform market structures and "contribute to their usefulness." He hopes the book, which includes discussion questions at the end of each of the 12 chapters, is a practical guide for Christians.

Halteman is associate professor of economics and department chair at Wheaton College, where he has taught since 1979.

Marriage

Mark Troyer, Waterford, Pa., and Linda Smith, Union City, Pa., March 26.

Births

Michael and Gloria Steiner Hood, Indianapolis, Scott Ross, Aug. 20.

Notes

Susan Y. Kenagy, Glen Cove, N.Y., received a master's degree in mechanical engineering from Oregon State University in June. She is now employed as an engineer at Steinway Piano Company, New York.

Patricia Shumaker is teaching English as a second language at an American school in San Salvador, El Salvador, for two years.

Class Agent

Laura Riegsecker

Birth

Notes

John F. and Sandra Shenk Lapp have been appointed to a four-year assignment in Israel with Mennonite Board of Missions. They began language study in Amman, Jordan, in mid-September and expected to begin their assignment in January. Lapps will work in the Arab village of Ibillin in Galilee in northern Israel under the direction of Father Elias Chacour, a Melkite (Greek Catholic) priest who has had previous contacts with Mennonites.

Douglas and Jill Benedict Minter have moved to Washington, D.C. He works for the Environmental Protection Agency, Department of Accountability, and she is an assistant to the program director in the Peace Corps office.

Christine Wenger Nofsinger began a two-year Mennonite Central Committee assignment in Akron, Pa., where she works as women's concern coordinator.

Lonnie and Janice Kennel Ropp, Hoffman Estates, Ill., have been involved in the church planting of Christ Community Church, a new Mennonite church in Schaumburg, Ill. They helped make 24,000 phone calls to residents in the area using the "Phones for You" telemarketing plan.

Class Agent

Joan Gotwals Yoder

Birth

Calvin and Carol Long Zehr, Goshen, Jenna Lynn, Oct. 21.

Notes

Paula Stauffer, Alma, Kan., spent two months as an overseas mission intern in Nepal with Mennonite Board of Missions. She was a volunteer English teacher for a small group of Nepali students ages 9 to 12 at Gandaki Boarding School in Pokhara.

Steven Swartzendruber, Goshen, has been named district manager of Wendy's restaurants in Elkhart County. He oversees three stores with 14 managers and 110 employees. He has been with the company five years, spending the last year in LaPorte as store manager and area trainer.

Media guide notes Kreider Yoder's work

Stephen Kreider Yoder '81, Toyko, Japan, has received praise in a new publication. The 1988 Media Guide: A Critical Review of the Print Media's Recent Coverage of the World Economy cites Yoder's work as a foreign dispatch technology reporter for The Asian Wall Street Journal.

The guide followed Yoder's reporting on the superconductivity race and said, "There was no one in the entire press corps who was even remotely close to him in covering this scene." The guide gave him a three-star rating (out of a possible four) for "superior reporting and writing, above average in analytical skills."

Births

Dale and Beth Schafer Stoltzfus, Elkhart, Ind., Justin Derek, Oct. 25.

Marriage

David Kochsmeier, Glendale, Ariz., and Beverly Goshow, Hatfield, Pa., Sept. 3.

Birth

Robert and Brenda Stoltzfus Toews, Goshen, Benjamin Jacob, Oct. 21.

Notes

Randall Jacobs has joined Yoder, Ainlay, Ulmer and Buckingham as an associate member of the Goshen law firm. He graduated cum laude May 7 from the Indiana University School of Law, Indianapolis, and was formally admitted to the state bar on Oct. 14.

Timothy Klassen, Goshen, completed Communion Fellowship's SEND (School for Equipping and Nurturing Disciples) in May 1987. He currently lives at the Lincoln Hotel in an extended experiential ministry.

Bradley Dyck Kliewer, Bloomington, Ind., is the author of EGA/VGA, a Programmer's Reference Guide , published by McGraw Hill. The book is entering its third printing and is the best-selling computer book in three years. He has begun writing a second book on another computer topic.

A tax deduction now — income later

It sounds like a contradiction but this can be done with a Deferred Payment Gift Annuity Plan. This is how it works.

Cash or stock is transferred irrevocably to Goshen College in return for the promise to pay a fixed amount annually for life to the donor. Any amount of $2,000 or more may be placed in a Deferred Payment Gift Annuity. You receive an immediate, substantial charitable income tax deduction with income beginning at a future date of your choosing.

This type of plan is ideal for those who are in their high-earning years, who can use a charitable tax deduction now, who want to increase retirement income, and who, at the same time, want to make a future gift to Goshen College.

To receive personalized information on a Deferred Payment Gift Annuity, please complete the coupon below. You will receive information, but will be under no obligation whatsoever.

Newcomer garden re-designed

By Johannes Lichti

A garden in the Japanese style has taken shape at Goshen College's Newcomer Center during the last two years.

Jon Cutrell '76, a landscape designer, designed and planted the garden, which is located between the lounge in the Newcomer Center lobby and the Newcomer wing housing the archives of the Mennonite Church.

The garden's re-design was made possible by a fund set up by Ervin and Phyllis Beck, Goshen, and friends as a memorial for two of the Becks' children, Joel and Sarah, who both died of leukemia. Joel died at age nine in 1973 and Sarah died in 1984 at age 14. Ervin Beck is a Goshen College professor of English and Phyllis Beck is a reference librarian at the Goshen Public Library.

Cutrell cultivated the square area with spring flowers, shrubs and trees, most of which are native to Indiana. One stylistic element in the garden that reflects Japanese design is a dry stream bed made of white pebbles that winds through the landscaping.

In his design, Cutrell wanted to give the garden the look of a miniature wilderness. ''People, especially in an academic setting, don't get in touch with nature that often,'' the designer said, ''so I tried to provide a little wilderness spot for them.''

The garden is rich with aspens, hemlock evergreens and many varieties of flowers, including spring beauties and May apples. Cutrell planted woodruff as ground cover.

A walk made of bricks salvaged from the streets of Elkhart divides the garden diagonally. Opposite the corner that is most densely planted is a small embedded fountain outlined by white limestone beams. The beams formerly were window sills on an old building, Cutrell said.

Wildlife has discovered the garden. ''Mourning doves have been nesting here and, of course, there are always chipmunks,'' Cutrell said.

Cutrell was an art major at GC; he finds landscaping an exciting career. ''Unlike painting landscapes, you are creating the real thing,'' he said. ''You have an organism that is growing and changing all the time.''

Peace weekend theme

''Eminent Domain,'' the winner of the 1988 Goshen College Peace Play Contest, was performed Dec. 1-2 in Umble Center.

Ronald L. Dye, Bloomington, Ind., is the author of the play, which deals with a widower who must face the loss of a beloved tree on the date of his wedding anniversary.

In celebration of the peace play, the Goshen College Peace Society sponsored two other activities. On Friday, Charlie King, a well-known folksinger and songwriter, gave a free concert in Newcomer Center. King has performed with Pete Seeger, Arlo Guthrie, Holly Near and Ronnie Gilbert and has recorded five solo albums and three with Bright Morning Star, a folk ensemble. His latest album, recorded with Martha Leader, is ''My Heart Keeps Sneakin' Up on My Head'' on the Flying Fish label.

''In the past 15 years, I've kept my ears and eyes open for stories and turned them into songs. My songs are filled with the hope, courage and humor of feisty, rebellious people,'' he said.

On Saturday, ''Los Muchachos'' presented the play, ''The Flight of the Quetzal,'' in Umble Center. ''Los Muchachos'' are George Sanchez and David Perrigo, professional actors who were members of the national touring company of the play, ''A Peasant of El Salvador,'' which was presented at Goshen College in 1986.

''Flight of the Quetzal'' tells the story of an encounter between two men, one an anthropologist searching for the quetzal, a bird of ancient Mayan myths, and the other a refugee from Central America running for his life.

Keith Johnston '85 (right) talks with a booth representative during Goshen College's Community Ethnic Arts, Crafts and Foods Fair last fall. The Ukrainian exhibit was one of nine set up in Newcomer Center Oct. 29. ''As I watched Ukrainians, Chinese, Hispanics, Japanese, Blacks, Asians and Germans working together, I couldn't help but feel it was a small step toward our ultimate goal of peace among peoples of the world,'' said Marjorie Liechty, coordinator of the fair.

Ceramics artist speaks

Ceramics artist Paul Soldner, the second Eric Yake Kenagy Visiting Artist, gave lecture-demonstrations on campus Nov. 21-22. The Goshen College Art Gallery's November show was an exhibit of some of Soldner's works.

Soldner maintains a studio near Aspen, Colo., and heads the ceramics program at Scripps College and Claremont Graduate School, Claremont, Calif. The readers of Ceramics Monthly named him as one of the 12 most important living artists working in ceramics.

The artist first became known in the 1950s for his monumental stoneware floor pots. He is particularly noted for his work in raku, an oriental ceramic process. He also has invented high-quality labor-saving clay processing equipment and potter's wheels.

A graduate of Bluffton (Ohio) College, Soldner also holds a master's degree from the University of Colorado at Boulder and an M.F.A. from the Los Angeles County Art Institute, where he studied with Peter Voulkos.

Soldner's visit to Goshen was a homecoming because he lived there 1931-37 while his father was the pastor of the Eighth Street Mennonite Church.

The Eric Yake Kenagy Visiting Artist Series is an endowment honoring Eric Kenagy, a Goshen College art major who was killed in an automobile-bicycle accident in 1986. The first visiting artist was Ruth Duckworth, Chicago.

Life issues the focus of chapel presentations

By Karen Kurtz

In November the college community focused on "Life Issues 88" during four special chapel talks.

Wilbur Birky, professor of English and experienced leader of four SST units in Costa Rica and the People's Republic of China, spoke on "SST: Burning Bush or Prodigal Son" during the week of presentations on issues confronting students.

Some SSTers, he noted, may experience doubts about their spiritual and career choices. "This is a universal pattern for all significant events of encounter and growth. It is a natural part of the SST experience. There is a period of alienation, of waiting, of silence — and it happens to all of us — before the meaning of the experience becomes clear," Birky said. The professor then spoke about several "biblical SST experiences."

"I hope your SST experience is not like the Pharisee who goes to an Arab country and returns to the comfort of the synagogue, grateful he's not like the poor and oppressed he's seen over there," said Birky.

"I hope your experience is not like the prodigal son who had a blast, did the beaches, spent his American dollars in riotous living, and had a transformation — a pigsty of self-worth.

"I would wish for you an experience like that of Moses, who suddenly one day sees the burning bush and finds God speaking about oppression and injustice. He returns to lead his people to a vision of hope and freedom. With a little help from his brother and the voice of God, Moses takes up a new career.

"Make the end of SST the beginning of new possibilities in your career, in service for the church, with MCC or Witness for Peace, in development work or with teaching English to speakers of other languages," he said.

Other speakers during the week were Martha Smith Good, Judith Davis and Lauren Friesen.

Smith Good, campus minister, set the tone for the chapels as she looked at "what must be at the very heart of a college committed to the Christian way." Focusing on Jesus as a model, the minister said he is the leveler who stabilizes life. "Jesus models for us a new understanding of power and how we are to use it in our faith experience," she said.

Davis, associate professor of French, said Jesus is the model for relationships that are centered on justice and non-violence. In reviewing the parable of the widow who sought justice from an unjust judge and the parable of the prayers of the Pharisee and the tax collector, Davis said we can find a message for our own time.

Friesen, associate professor of theater, looked at faith in the midst of suffering through the lives of Job and Christ. Friesen said suffering is somewhere in the center of life's storms, as we are forced to re-examine the purpose of our lives. "Where do we come in?" he asked. "We need to walk with Jesus so that his agony will help us to respond with compassion."

"Love's Labour's Lost," William Shakespeare's comedy of four men and their desperate struggle to pursue knowledge and give up worldly pleasures, was the fall performance of the Goshen College Players. Among the other recent cultural events on campus were the Chamber Choir Concert, Orchestra Concert, Jazz Band/Vocal Jazz Concert, Goshen Oratorio Chorus and performances of "Messiah" by the GC choirs and orchestra. In December, Art Gallery featured "The Old Testament: Reflections Upon Human Experience," an exhibit by Randy Horst, new member of the art department.

WGCS-FM celebrates 30th anniversary

WGCS began its operations Oct. 2, 1958, under the guidance of Jacob F. Swartzendruber, a physics professor who served as the first general manager and chief engineer.

Impetus for the station came from a Class of 1956 gift earmarked for broadcasting equipment. College administrators encouraged the project by budgeting funds to purchase classical records.

Once launched, WGCS operated under the direction of the Goshen College Broadcasting Corporation. Corporation officers this year are Vic Stoltzfus, president; Stuart Showalter, vice president; and Bill Zuercher, secretary-treasurer.

The corporation holds the Federal Communications Commission license and sets general policies, while the department provides managerial and instructional oversight. Ron Johnson serves as general manager of WGCS and assistant professor of communication in the broadcasting area. The chief engineer is Bob Baker, and the student station manager is Marta Brunner. A volunteer staff of over 40 drawn from the student body, faculty, alumni and community carries out WGCS programming, announcing and engineering.

The goals of WGCS remain the same as in the beginning: to provide an educational laboratory for students interested in broadcasting; to present fine arts programming to the community; and to support the college's outreach in community and church relations.

The station's format is educational, classical and religious. Classical and contemporary music, news, sports, chapels and convocations, worship services and live broadcasts of a variety of events are part of the station's programming.

What began as experiments in common-carrier broadcasting and occasional pre-recorded programs released to local radio stations has grown into a full-fledged operation. Now listeners within a 25-mile radius of Goshen's campus can hear WGCS broadcasts 365 days a year for more than 12 hours a day.

Season's records mixed

In November Goshen's fall sports teams concluded another solid season of competition.

The highlight of the season for the cross country team was the fine performance of senior runner Aletha Stahl. Stahl qualified for the national NAIA meet by winning the District 21 meet.

The soccer team finished the season with a 9-6-3 record, including a perfect 4-0 conference record. The Leafs were seeded second in the District 21 tournament, but lost to Huntington 1-0 in the opening round.

The men's tennis team had an outstanding season, finishing 10-0 in the regular season. Senior Frank Hess led the way, becoming the first Goshen player ever to capture the NAIA District 21 singles title. Frank will compete in the national NAIA meet next spring.

The women's tennis team finished with a strong 6-2 regular season record. Susan Hunsberger was named to the HCW All-Conference team, and Joy Hess was named HCW Coach of the Year.

Goshen's volleyball team finished with a respectable 21-14 record. The fighting Maple Leafs certainly earned their trip to the District 21 Tournament by winning the HCW Tournament. At the tournament, sixth-ranked GC fell to third-ranked Marian in the first round, then upset Franklin, and finally lost to Huntington.

Undoubtedly the biggest surprise of all was the success of the field hockey team. After contemplating canceling the season due to so few athletes, the Leafs rallied to notch the most successful field hockey season in Goshen's history. They finished with a 13-3 record, including a second-place finish in the HCW to traditional powerhouse DePauw. Sophomore Michelle Yoder broke the single season scoring record with 16 goals. That total, combined with her 11 goals as a freshman, leaves her just one goal shy of Chris Landis' career record of 27 set just last year.

Ohio exhibit featured GC works

Works of art by 15 Goshen College students were displayed at the Fayette Normal University Collegiate Invitational Art Exhibit at the Rorick Gallery, Fayette, Ohio, Nov. 10-20.

The exhibit's title honored Fayette Normal University, an educational institution which existed 1882-1905 in the northwestern Ohio community. The Fayette Arts Council and the Fayette High School Art Club sponsored the exhibit to give the art club's members an opportunity to learn how to set up an art exhibition and to give undergraduate art students a chance to display art works.

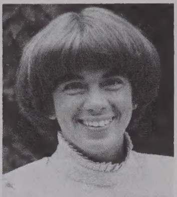
Education professor, alumna help produce book



By Lois Landis Kurowski

Kathy Gnagey Short, Goshen College associate professor of education, is one of the authors of a newly published book, Creating Classrooms for Authors: The Reading-Writing Connection.

Published by Heinemann Educational Books of Portsmouth, N.H., the book also was written by Jerome C. Harste, professor of education at the Indiana University School of Education, Bloomington. Carolyn Burke, also an IU-Bloomington professor of education, contributed the theoretical groundwork to the book.

Listed as one of six "contributing teacher researchers" is Gloria Kauffman, who teaches third grade at Millersburg Elementary School in the Fairfield Community Schools.

In the first section of the book the authors develop a practical theory of literacy instruction; in the second section, they describe more than 30 strategies for creating a literacy-learning environment.

Short and Kauffman worked together in the 1984-85 school year, when Short did field research for her doctoral dissertation in Kauffman's classroom. At that time, Kauffman taught first grade.

Short spent 10 months visiting the classroom and working with Kauffman to develop collaborative techniques to teach reading and writing to the class.

Short spent the 1985-86 school year in Columbus, Ohio, working with noted children's literature expert Charlotte Huck in implementing the "Reading Recovery" program in elementary schools. She received a post-doctoral fellowship to work with Huck.

In the last two years, Short has traveled extensively giving lectures and in-service workshops for teachers on the authoring cycle, which she describes as "a general curricular framework on how we create meaning using a variety of communication systems."

In June 1988, she worked with teachers in the Honolulu, Hawaii, Public Schools on evaluating reading strategies. In July, she gave a presentation on collaborative learning environments at the World Congress of the International Reading Association in Brisbane, Australia, and spoke on the authoring cycle to teachers in Queensland, Australia.

The authoring cycle involves having children read and write for a variety of purposes in the classroom. For instance, one start-up project is called "Getting to Know You." In this project, the children in the class interview each other, write up their interview without interruption, read what they've written to other pupils and revise their own writing.

The teacher edits the paper only after the authors have shared what they have written with the other members of the class and edited it themselves. Then all the pupils' interviews are typed up and published in a class newspaper.

"How we, as educators, conceptualize education and literacy is important. Similarly, how we teach determines what we teach," Harste, Short and Burke write in the book. "As a curricular frame, the authoring cycle represents an attempt to orchestrate the how and what of teaching, so that children can experience mental trips associated with using literacy as a vehicle for exploring and expanding their world."

A native of Archbold, Ohio, Short is a 1975 Goshen College graduate. She received a master's degree in elementary education from Ball State University in 1979 and a doctoral degree in reading education from Indiana University at Bloomington.

Gloria Kauffman is a 1979 Goshen College graduate. Several writing samples from her classes and from elementary-school classes of other Goshen College graduates are included in the book.

Mishler wins 'Best of Show'

John Mishler '72, Goshen College instructor in art, recently won the "Best of Show" prize at the 10th Elkhart Juried Regional Exhibit at the Midwest Museum of American Art, Elkhart, Ind.

The show was open to artists in 14 Indiana counties and three counties in southwestern Michigan. Coachmen Industries, Inc., Elkhart, underwrote the exhibit. The guest juror, Roger Brown of Chicago, selected only 77 pieces out of 307 works submitted for the show.

Mishler's winning entry was "Dream Spinner," a painted steel sculpture.

The artist also had several works in an exhibit at the South Bend (Ind.) Art Center in the Century Center building. Mishler and Greg Constantine, a member of the art faculty at Andrews University, Berrien Springs, Mich., were the first two local artists selected to present a two-person show at the center. The show represented the Art Center's new policy of giving local artists the opportunity to show in the center's main gallery.

Nurse's dissertation on Amish concept of care

By Lois Landis Kurowski

The Old Order Amish sometimes confound observers by what seems to be a contradiction in their lifestyle. They reject the use of telephones, automobiles and electricity but they willingly use the services of non-Amish health-care professionals and hospitals.

However, the Amish use of modern medicine is not an example of hypocrisy, according to A. Frances Wenger, Goshen College associate professor of nursing. Instead, it is an example of how the Amish use technology selectively to protect and reinforce their community.

Wenger spent three years (1985-88) researching and writing a doctoral dissertation on the Old Order Amish concept of care. She received a Ph.D. in nursing Oct. 31 from Wayne State University, Detroit, Mich.

Very little research has been done on health care among the Amish, Wenger said. She used ethnographic research techniques for the study, which she conducted in an Old Order Amish community in the Elkhart-LaGrange counties (Ind.) settlement.

Wenger decided to concentrate her work on a group of 13 families whose children all attended the same Amish school. She selected an Amish school as the focal institution because schools are among the few institutions operated by the Amish.

After approaching the community through the chairman of the Indiana Amish school board and the chairman of the individual school's board, she and her husband Marion Wenger attended a school parent-teacher meeting, where she presented her research proposal.

After a three-month period of visiting appropriate key persons, including the bishop and the teachers, Wenger was able to begin ethnographic interviews and participant observation in the community.

Although she did her research through interviews, Wenger also attended Amish social events such as quilting parties and funerals to understand their culture better. She found that the persons she interviewed could express their concept of care better if they spoke in Pennsylvania Dutch. Wenger grew up in a Mennonite community in Pennsylvania and can speak that German dialect.

Caring about other people is considered a central part of being Amish and a way that Amish society holds itself together. The Amish use four different words to express their concept of care, Wenger found. One word that expresses caring means to think about another person. Another word means to do everything possible to help someone. A third word means actually waiting on or serving someone, while a fourth word means to protect or watch over someone.

The Amish also emphasize what Wenger calls "anticipatory care," seeing people often so that one can easily tell when others are not well or are in need of care.

The seeming contradiction between Amish rejection of modern devices and their acceptance of modern medicine is not a contradiction at all, Wenger said.

The Amish do not believe that automobiles, telephones or electricity are evil; however, they do not like the effect such technology has on families and communities. What they reject is the effect of technology, not technology itself.

By not driving automobiles or having telephones in their homes, the Amish can use technology selectively, controlling the technology rather than allowing the technology to control them.

The Amish do use modern medicine, but they also accept many other kinds of health care, Wenger said. For instance, they will use the services of Amish folk healers, reflexologists and other unconventional practitioners. "They can talk about going to Mayo Clinic and about going to sit in a uranium mine in the same breath," the nurse-educator noted.

They prefer to take an active role in their health care, but they believe that conventional health-care professionals don't want to hear about other health-care alternatives.

The rising cost of health care has affected the Amish. Every person she interviewed mentioned the high cost of modern medical treatment, Wenger said. An Amish family may discuss a particularly expensive treatment with their bishop if they believe they may have to ask the church for help, she added.

Although there is a kind of health insurance administered by the Amish called Amish Aid, the Amish Wenger interviewed do not use that service. However, many Amish men work in local factories and will sometimes accept workers' compensation for a job-related injury.

Wenger's interest in people's concept of care originated in her work in Ghana, West Africa, 1974-76, as a nurse, and earlier as a faculty leader of Goshen College Study-Service Term units in Haiti, Nicaragua and Germany. As she learned about the different concepts of care in different cultures, she became interested in transcultural nursing.

In early October, Wenger took office as the president of the National Transcultural Nursing Society, a 200-member organization. Among its members are nurses, other health-care professionals, anthropologists and scholars who have an interest in transcultural nursing.

Interest in transcultural nursing is growing, Wenger said, as nursing researchers focus more on the humanistic side of nursing and concentrate less on statistically based research. The society's 1989 convention will be at the University of Limburg, Maastricht, the Netherlands, and the organizers believe that they will not have room for all the people who will want to attend.

Global thinking necessary in interdependent world

By Victor Stoltzfus

Today I learned of a recent alumnus, Sam Burkholder '80, whose work in industry requires monthly commutes to Brazil. He and a growing number of Goshen graduates are multi-cultural citizens in a global society, working in two languages and cultures.

Many North American educators, journalists and politicians neglect the fact that we live in a global society. Living in a continent-wide country with superpower status in the world makes it possible to hold on to illusions of national self-sufficiency long after the underlying realities have changed. However, responsible educators who care about preparing students for the real world of the present and the future must reflect our interdependency in the family of nations.

A recent study sponsored by the Council on International Educational Exchange (Educating for Global Competence) is instructive. The council notes that we lag behind other nations in educational exchange. Three hundred and fifty thousand foreign students are in the U.S., but fewer than 50,000 of the 12 million U.S. students study abroad. Nicely phrased, this is our "deficit in the balance of education." The council recommends "a major expansion of study abroad in order to improve the country's ability to meet contemporary challenges."

We North Americans have investments abroad of $300 billion. Foreigners have invested about $1.5 trillion (one million billion) in the United States. Four of every five new jobs are generated as a direct result of foreign trade.

In an address to Goshen College parents during our recent Alumni Weekend, Henry Weaver, former GC provost and now deputy director for international education at University of California, gave us additional evidence that a global society has already arrived. Electronic world banking permits rapid flow of money among nations. Remember Oct. 19, 1987? American and European bankers are also nervous about the $1.2 trillion debt of the developing world. The debtor nations worry about their ability to preserve democracy and still impose the economic constraints necessary for continued credit. Communication is worldwide, linked by direct-dial phones, television and movies.

Environmental problems such as acid rain, ozone depletion and the destruction of tropical rain forests ignore national boundaries. In medicine there is success in a world fight against smallpox and the failure to arrest the worldwide spread of AIDS. Crime, terrorism and war are international. Our greatest sports event is the international Olympics. And we refer to the major religious faiths of our time as world religions.

A liberal arts education enhances our students' capacity to think comprehensively and relationally. We claim that liberal learning helps a person to make sense of individual facts by placing them within a meaningful context. Responsible education for today and tomorrow must include the contextual realities of an inter-connected world economy and society. And that includes a proper skepticism of those American leaders whose claims and promises presume that our nation's economic, military and political future is independent of the world community.

World citizenship is also important for a global vision of our Christian faith. Mennonites now include 774,000 people in 57 countries. The total of all professing Christian believers in the world is 1,619,272,560 or 32.9 percent of the world population in 1986 (Encyclopaedia Britannica).

Goshen students studying abroad have met an East German professor who believes in God and whose children are confirmed. We have introduced friends in Chengdu, China, to the Protestant Church in their own hometown. Students in Central America and the Carribean have seen the work of their church and service agencies firsthand. Visitors to Poland may have to visit several churches to find room to get inside. Western Europe's churches have many empty seats.

Goshen students and recent alumni are crossing national boundaries as casually as their parents crossed state and provincial lines. Our perspectives must catch up with our passports. All of us, Goshen College alumni, faculty and students must think globally because an interdependent world is the only one we have.

Building intercultural understanding

About this issue

This issue of the Bulletin looks at the impact of SST on host countries. The article by Ron Stutzman draws on the research he and his wife Phyllis did during 1982-84 in Costa Rica and Belize on just that topic. Dan Hess comments further on the theme in Sum and Substance from the perspective of a faculty member now leading his third SST unit in Costa Rica. The third article reports on interviews our staff conducted with individuals from countries that have hosted SST units.

What surprised me is these articles is that some of our hosts say we've been overly fearful of having an adverse effect on their country. They say students could do much more to change attitudes about Americans and to articulate unique Mennonite beliefs, for example.

That theme is particularly significant in light of the increased awareness of the importance of international education in high places. Government officials see it as necessary for enhancing foreign trade that will promote U.S. economic growth.

The report of the governors' Task Force on International Education released Feb. 25 said "International education is absolutely essential to American prosperity." The report continued, "More than ever before our economic well-being is intertwined with that of other countries through expanding international trade, financial markets and investments."

Yet the GC emphasis is different. The international education program isn't designed to enhance our economic well-being, but to build genuine understanding among diverse peoples who share a common lifeboat — the earth.

Extending the family of God's peace

By Ron Stutzman

For Goshen College students 14 weeks of international education on SST mean leaving behind the familiar for a time of learning far from friends and family. SST is a test of maturity, a chance to discover what it's like to "go it alone."

At the same time, for the families in Central America and the Caribbean who have graciously hosted Goshen students over the past 20 years, SST has been an opportunity to reach out to new friends and incorporate them into an ever-extending family.

This mismatch of perceptions and expectations between SSTers and host families produces a creative tension in the host household. SSTers see themselves going off alone, some boldly and some timidly, to test themselves in the great unknown abroad; their hosts see themselves striving to create the family-like connections that serve to ease the student's passage into the host's way of life.

It is clear what our hosts are offering us as guests when they help us find ourselves within their milieu. It is less clear what we as guests have to offer our hosts.

This article develops the metaphor of SST as family, a metaphor that helps me better understand how as guests we can, through mutual sharing, enter into relationships with our hosts that can lead us all toward the wholeness of God's peace.

Perhaps they're in it for the money

What lies behind host-family interest in SST? What do hosts gain from their connection to Goshen College through SSTers and their faculty leaders? My wife Phyllis and I attempted to answer those questions when we lived in Costa Rica and Belize in 1983 as part of an evaluation of SST's impact on host countries.

As a rule families in Costa Rica and Belize do not host Goshen students primarily for the income it brings them. For one thing, Goshen typically pays less for the services host families provide than do other programs that place North-American young people in Latin-American homes.

For another, economic conditions in the SST countries have declined over the past decade, resulting in a severe squeeze on family budgets. The middle-income family, who in the early years might have used their own car or jeep to take an SSTer on a weekend outing, today leaves the same vehicle standing in the carport for lack of cash to buy gas. From a financial point of view, hosting Goshen students is at best a break-even proposition.

But my North American phrasing, "in it for the money," oversimplifies, even misconstrues, host-family perceptions and motivations. The 1983 evaluation of SST in Belize by Maria Caritas Lawrence, a Sister of Mercy and Director of St. Catherine's Academy in Belize City, is more revealing of the tensions host families face.

Some families, she reported, "felt that while the money paid them was sufficient to feed the students adequately, there was little or none left over to pay for the service they provided. All remarked that the money did not allow them to feed students the way they would have liked to. They felt this lack to be an imposition on what good Belizean hospitality called for, and what their sense of motherliness dictated."

Yet host families in Belize all agreed that what they received from students in exchange for the service and love given students was "intangible benefits such as companionship, a feeling of being able to help others and a sense of doing good in return for the good done them," including when they had traveled to the United States.

"Most of all, hosting SSTers offered Belizeans the opportunity to form some long and lasting friendships with both Goshen faculty and students," Lawrence said.

As Zenón Chacón, long-time host to SSTers in San Isidro, Costa Rica, explained, the aim and intention is to create a family atmosphere. "If the families are paid too much, students will expect to be treated like hotel guests, demanding whatever services they feel their money should cover.

"It is better that hosts care for SSTers out of the goodness of their hearts," Chacón said. "The student will then be more inclined to accept a role as just another member of the family. Likewise, because they can ill afford it, the host family will not be tempted to try to imitate all the familiar comforts of the student's North-American home."

The mutual sharing of cultures

While extra income was a mixed factor in host motivation, many more families said that the mutual sharing of cultures was a stronger reason for hosting GC students. From the host's perspective, our willingness to share of ourselves with them is very important.

The ideal host family is the one that integrates the Goshen student as an adopted son or daughter into the routines of the household. Authentic immersion into the host culture means that the student, once he or she has learned the family routines, is given no special treatment. The SSTer lives, eats and sleeps like everyone else in the household. It's arroz y frijoles todos los dias (rice and beans day in and day out).

Since each SSTer lives with a different host family, the SST group can soon develop a rather well-rounded picture of the host country's culture and society by pooling their varied experiences. As Dr. Edith Hudicourt, Haitian host mother and SST unit physician, explained in her October, 1982, address on the Goshen campus to students who would soon be leaving for SST:

Whether or not you realize it, interchanges with your host families will be "profitable both for you and for them because the questions you ask them will be based on your North-American values and priorities and will include comparisons and assessments of similarities and divergences between the two cultures," Dr. Hudicourt said.

The establishment of these personal contacts is one of the most important outcomes of the SST program, Dr. Hudicourt said, because "outside the United States, you SSTers represent a living alternative to the images of Anglo-North Americans created by the mass media and by U.S. tourists. The image you project will have a strong impact on the minds of your Latin hosts. It will apply new colors to their images of Anglo-North American people."

Extending the family

Host testimony quoted so far makes it clear that the benefits of SST, the giving and receiving, have been reciprocal. Even after SST, personal relationships continue for many.

Dr. Hudicourt, for example, relates that "my first Goshen College student-guest worked seven weeks in a rural hospital and learned to understand the Creole language while there.

"After she graduated from college in nursing, she got a master's degree in public health and returned to Haiti to work for the World Health Organization. Over the years several more SSTers have returned to work in Haiti, some as volunteers, others as employees."

The pattern has been repeated in each country. Goshen graduates have returned to work, visit or find a spouse in the country where they did SST. At the same time, Belizeans, Costa Ricans, Dominicans, Haitians, Hondurans and Guadeloupens have come to visit or study in Goshen. Family ties, both figurative and literal, extend in both directions.

A little closer to wholeness

Yet, what of the tension created by individual student's perception of SST as an identity quest? Sister Caritas in her study of SST in Belize clarified for me how in "finding ourselves" we can also be of service to our hosts.

When I did my evaluation, "I was interested to find out if Goshen students who go to Belize made an impact at all from a distinctively Mennonite point of view," she said. "To do that, I asked a very simple question. I said, 'You know the Mennonites are conscientious objectors to war. They are one of the three peace churches in America. Did you know that? Was there any way in which a student indicated this to you?' I asked the host families, and I asked the people in service settings. The answer to a man and a woman was, 'No.' "

"I know you will say, 'But how do I share my tradition without proselytizing or showing off?' Simple. At the table, they're telling you a Belizean story and when they finish, you tell them a Mennonite story. They will accept it. If you don't know the stories, look them up so you will know them, so you can share them. Or else you become takers, and you don't give anything in return."

"You might say, 'But we pay our way there. We pay our tuition and so we pay for what we are given.' Neither you nor the college can pay for the love, the interest, the planning and the caring you receive. But you can pay somehow by sharing who you are. Your hosts become better, and you become better. You become a little bit more equal with them because you have given, and you have taken. They will have given, and they will have taken. If we both give and both take, then we will both come a little closer to wholeness."

My encounters with Sister Caritas, Zenón Chacón, Edith Hudicourt, Carlos Arguello and many more friends of SST have helped me to a vision of the Study-Service Term as an extension of the family — a family within which we from Goshen College go to learn, but also to teach, to minister and be ministered unto. We learn about ourselves as well as about our host brothers and sisters (they teach us). They learn about themselves as well as about us (we teach them). In the process, we nudge each other a little closer to the wholeness of God's peace.

Ron Stutzman is professor of anthropology at Goshen College. During 1982-84, Ron and Phyllis were involved in a project funded by the National Endowment For The Humanities to develop and test methods for on-site evaluation of study-abroad programs, including Goshen's SST programs in Belize and Costa Rica. Ron and his wife Phyllis will lead the 1989-90 SST unit in Costa Rica.

Observations on SST

Personal contact has been invaluable

By John D. Yoder

What impact do SSTers have on the attitudes and lives of the people they encounter in Central America, East Germany and China?

We had an opportunity to find out during "Festival Internationale!" on the Goshen campus last October. Guests from Belize, the Dominican Republic, Guadeloupe, the German Democratic Republic (GDR) and Costa Rica visited Goshen to participate in this celebration. Since these guests were familiar with Goshen's SST program in their countries, we asked them to evaluate the impact of SST on people in their country. While not a scientific study, their comments are helpful in completing the picture of SST's positive or negative effects.

For this article the comments of these guests were supplemented by the observations of two Chinese scholars who are in residence at GC this year and who are familiar with the work of SSTers at Sichuan Teachers' University in Chengdu.

All of those we interviewed said that the GC program has had a positive impact on their country. Some wished it would be more dramatic.

The comments of Professor Colville Young from Belize City are typical. Even though SST units no longer go to Belize, GC students have left an indelible imprint there, he said. "Once Belizians got to know what Goshen students were all about, they loved them," Young said "I know of no negative aspects about SST, and I would certainly like to see the program come to Belize again."

Economic benefits

Several persons we interviewed mentioned the economic benefits of SST. Income from housing students is significant, said Dr. Humberto Pérez, University of Costa Rica, San José. Rafaela Taveras, Universidad Nacional Pedro Henriquez Ureña (UNPHU), Dominican Republic said UNPHU needs the American dollars it receives to buy audiovisual materials and other expensive resources. Dollars are extremely valuable in the depressed Dominican economy.

The SST program also has economic value for his university, said Dr. Heinz Endermann, a member of the language faculty at Friedrich Schiller University, Jena, GDR. He noted that the income helps buy needed equipment.

Yet the comments of all our guests downplayed the economic benefits of SST in comparison to other contributions the program makes. The skills SSTers bring with them, the friendships formed and the increased understanding between countries were far more significant, they said.

Skills and service

Those we interviewed also saw real value in the skills the GC students brought with them and the service they performed. In Belize Goshen students worked in hospitals on several occasions, said Professor Young. "They contributed greatly this way because Belize, as many Third-World countries, is short of trained people in vital areas, such as health and social services and education to just name three. The students' contribution, in a way, plugged up a gap in our needs," Young said.

One skill many GC student have shared in their host countries is the ability to teach English. Zhou Yi, a Chinese scholar on campus this year, said that he worked with and observed the Goshen College students who have taught English in Sichuan Teachers' University. As a result of the teaching of the Goshen College SSTers, the speaking and listening abilities of the Sichuan Chinese students have improved in his department, he believes.

"I have two students taught by Goshen SSTers who passed oral examination with scores higher than other students," he said. When the young Chinese teachers took their English proficiency tests, they did better than young teachers from some other colleges and universities of Sichuan Province, Zhou said.

Xu Tianchi, another Chinese scholar, said another positive effect of the program is that it leads to many informal contacts between GC students and their Chinese pupils. "The Goshen College students are the same age as our students," he said. "They can mingle with and play with our students. They picnic together, go bike riding together and sometimes invite GC students to their homes."

As a result of these contacts a lot of informal conversation takes place that greatly improves their oral English skills, Xu said. It's good language training because it's "situational dialogue," the kind of language training that reinforces classroom learning.

The personal element — friendship

The friendships that form on SST are one of the obvious impacts the program has. When Rafaela Taveras came to Goshen's campus last fall for "Festival Internationale!," she brought gifts for students from their Dominican families. And when she returned to her home, she took gifts from students to their "parents" and "siblings."

The friendships are important because they lead to changes in perception. Professor Young from Belize said the GC students helped people in Belize learn "that not all Americans are selfish and out for the big buck." Belizians discovered that "the students were human beings who cared and shared, and I'm certain that this was a very good thing for both countries," Young explained.

Denise Galicia, French language instructor from Guadeloupe, also believes that GC students are good diplomats who are changing the "ugly-American syndrome" that U.S tourists have brought upon themselves on the Caribbean island. "I think Goshen students are changing that impression for the better," Galicia said.

Zhou Yi went even further. "Before GC students came to Sichuan many people in that area knew little about the U.S.," he said. "What they knew about the U.S. came from books and movies. "We did not know how the people in the U.S. actually lived and studied."

But GC students helped them understand the U.S. better. By talking with the GC students they discovered "real life is not what mass media suggests," he said.

The ultimate impact of the exchange could affect relations between our two countries, Zhou said. "The students the SSTers come in contact with in the classroom in China will be teachers; the impression of the U.S. the GC students leave with those teachers will influence those they teach."

A key to the success of the exchange, Zhou Yi added, is that it goes beyond book learning. "Knowledge is quite different from experience. The experience I have now in Goshen helps me much in understanding better the real life and real image of Americans.

"I came to the United States to learn the strengths of American culture more than to improve my English," he said. "In fact, a person can have a good command of English in China if he or she really wants to, since there are English video tapes, English listening tapes and teachers from English-speaking countries. Besides some Chinese professors of English are excellent. To help modernize my country, I prefer to train my students with global ideas (although English is an important tool)."

Dr. Endermann agreed that the emphasis on experiential learning is a key. "What we can learn from people is so much greater than we learn from textbooks," he said.

The impact could be greater

Several hosts expressed concern, however, that GC students could do more to change attitudes about American culture. Galicia believes that students need to mix more with the people in order to get to know them better. "That's what it's all about," she explained. "In Guadeloupe, people like to have deep relationships. Once a solid relationship exists, people will open more and more, and genuine cultural exchange is possible."

Dr. Pérez, who chairs the education department at the University of Costa Rica, is particularly well qualified to comment on the effect of SST because of his long association with GC's program and his background in educational theory.

One of the problems Dr. Pérez sees with SST in Costa Rica is that SSTers have not articulated their peace position and political beliefs. Nearly all Costa Ricans believe that most Americans support what he called "the right-wing policies" of the Reagan administration. Most Costa Ricans do not realize that a substantial percentage of the U.S. population does not support military intervention in Central America or aid to the Contras, he said.

Theoretically, this incorrect understanding of the U.S. politics is an area in which Goshen College could have an effect on Costa Rican perceptions, he said. If members of the Costa Rican elite were exposed to the peace message of the Mennonite Church, they would realize that the U.S. government's policies are not unanimously supported within the U.S. Dr. Pérez believes it is important for influential Costa Ricans to understand this fact.

Conclusion

From these interviews, it appears that the SST program is having a positive impact in the study-service settings. GC students are functioning as people-to people ambassadors between institutions, individuals and nations. They are giving as well as receiving from their hosts.

Yet while genuine cultural exchange is taking place, students could be doing more at correcting misperceptions of North American Christians and explaining unique Mennonite beliefs.

However, since the SST experience is the beginning of intercultural exchange for most GC students, how articulate can one expect them to be about their beliefs in a second language? Answering that question is a challenge that remains part of GC's on-going agenda for international education.

Mast sets scoring record

Kathy Mast, a sophomore from Wooster, Ohio, set a single-game scoring record for GC-women's basketball when she pumped in 33 points against Hanover Feb. 18. She broke the record of 32 points set by Dawn Gerber in the 1986-87 season.

The womens' team is playing well since struggling after the Christmas break. They are 17-8 overall and won the Hoosier Conference for Women championship against DePauw Feb. 25, qualifying for the NAIA District-21 Tournament.

Goshen has three of the conference's top 10 scorers. Kathy Mast is fourth (17.4 points per game), Jan Kolb is sixth (16.1) and Karen Gerber is 10th (11.5).

Kolb is performing well in all aspects of the game. She is listed fifth in the HCW with 7.8 rebounds a game, ninth in assists with 2.8 a game, third in free throw shooting at 89 percent and ninth in field goal shooting at 45 percent.

Gerber is leading the conference in field goal shooting at 56 percent and is tied for second in rebounds with nine boards a contest.

Point guard Jan Helmuth leads the conference in assists with 6.4 a game.

Mast is fourth in field goal shooting at 50 percent and ninth in free throw shooting at 81 percent.

The Goshen College men's basketball team finished the season with a 9-18 record. The Maple Leafs tied for fourth place with a 3-7 record in the Mid-Central Conference.

Senior Kevin Richie led the Goshen scoring with 14.0 points a game. Juniors Rick Lengacher and Dave Coil follow with 12.6 and 10.2 points a game, respectively.

Richie also led the Leafs in rebounding with 6.4 boards a game, followed by Coil's 5.4 rebounds a game.

Lengacher passed out 3.7 assists per contest. Junior Randy Brenneman averaged 3.6 and sophomore Mark Gerber added 3.1 assists.

Matching grant funds increased

Major increases in scholarships and grants are now in place for freshmen and transfer students for the 1989-90 academic year at Goshen College, said President Victor Stoltzfus. Tuition and fees are also set.

"Goshen College's financial aid packages will be more generous than in previous years. We are working toward closer relationships with costs as we help students put together their financial aid plans," Stoltzfus said.

In 1989-90 Goshen College will revise the Church Aid Matching Grant program, which will provide up to a $500 grant to match assistance given by a student's congregation or conference. This matching grant will be awarded in addition to other scholarships, grants or discounts for which students are also eligible.

Under the previous Goshen College Assured Matching Grant program, the $500 grant included other scholarships, grants, and discounts.

"The Church Aid Matching Grant program will provide up to $500 more for most students than they received in previous years," said Walter Schmucker, director of student financial aid. "We hope it will encourage more students to enroll because it helps students and parents deal directly with the increased cost of education and avoids an overdependence on loans."

Grant commitments by congregations and conferences made after May 1 will be matched only if sufficient funds are available, Schmucker added.

For new students, Goshen College will also increase financial aid for four scholarships in 1989-90. Menno Simons Scholarships will increase 11 percent up to $1,350 per year. Honors Scholarships, Hesston College Honors Scholarships, and Junior College Honors Scholarships will each increase 35 percent to $1,000 per year.

A transfer student who holds a renewable and comparable academic scholarship from any of the member institutions in the Council of Mennonite Colleges will receive a Goshen College Menno Simons or Honors Scholarship.

Goshen College fees are now set at $9,500 for the 1989-90 academic year, said Stoltzfus. Tuition will cost $6,610; board, $1,380; and room, $1,510. These figures represent an overall increase of eight percent from 1988-89.

Complete information about the financial aid process is available from the Office of Admissions or the Student Financial Aid Office, (800) 348-7422.

During the academic year 1988-89, 920 Goshen College students received an average financial aid amount of $5,266. Gift aid totaled $2,773,000, with $1,609,000 for loans and $414,000 for authorized employment.

Lois K. Bare, director of alumni relations, presents a "junior alumni" bear to Robert William Hoogenboom, held by his mother, Charlotte Joldersma Hoogenboom '82*. Mawby to address graduates

Dr. Russell G. Mawby, chairman of the board of trustees of the W. K. Kellogg Foundation and chief executive officer of the foundation, will be the speaker at Goshen College's 91st commencement ceremony at 3 p.m. Sunday, April 16, in the Union Auditorium.

Approximately 240 Goshen College students will graduate at the service.

A native of western Michigan, Dr. Mawby has degrees in horticulture and agriculture from Michigan State and Purdue Universities. He later was a faculty member at both institutions.

Dr. Mawby joined the Kellogg Foundation, Battle Creek, Mich., in 1965, becoming president and chief executive officer in 1970. In 1982, he became chairman of the board in addition to his duties as president. He is also a member of the boards of directors of the Kellogg Company, Battle Creek, and the J. M. Smucker Company, Orrville, Ohio.

Admission to commencement will be by tickets obtained from the graduates. Both the commencement service and the baccalaureate service at 11 a.m. the same day will be broadcast by WGCS, FM 91.1.

Rieth endows chair in environmental studies

Mary Jane Rieth, Goshen, has established a new endowed chair at Goshen College in honor of Lee A. Rieth, her late husband.

Larry R. Yoder, director of the Merry Lea Environmental Learning Center of Goshen College and associate professor of biology, has been appointed to be the first holder of the Lee A. Rieth Chair in Environmental Studies.

Lee and Mary Jane Rieth donated the Merry Lea Environmental Learning Center, located near Wolf Lake, Ind., to the college through the Nature Conservancy in 1980. The center has grown from its original 900 acres to 1,100 acres. It includes four miles of trails, six houses and cottages, three activity centers and storage buildings.

The center offers many educational services to schools and to the public. In fall, 1988, 1,500 area school children visited Merry Lea for educational programs. For the public, Merry Lea offers annual events such as Threshing Day in July, the Sunflower Festival in October, fall color tours, a cross-country skiing clinic and wildflower walks. Approximately 6,000 people visit Merry Lea annually.

During the winter, the center opens its trails for cross-country skiing and maintains an ice-skating pond.

Goshen College students may gain experience in environmental education at Merry Lea through the Lyall Internship Program, sponsored by the Lyall Electric Company, Kendallville, Ind. Eight students work at the center in spring. The college also has just created a new course, "Field Experience in Environmental Biology," in which students will conduct research or study biology at Merry Lea on an independent-study basis.

New dean appointed

John W. Eby has been appointed academic dean of Goshen College, said Victor Stoltzfus, GC president.

Eby, 48, is currently a professor of business and sociology and chairs the business department at Eastern Mennonite College (EMC), Harrisonburg, Va. He received a bachelor's degree in chemistry from EMC in 1962 and a master's degree in development sociology in 1970 and a doctoral degree in development sociology in 1972 from Cornell University, Ithaca, N.Y.

Besides teaching at EMC, Eby is a member of the Mennonite Board of Missions board of directors and chairs that board's Home Ministries Committee; he also is vice chairperson of the Mennonite Economic Development Associates' board of directors.

The new academic will start work July 1. He succeeds Willard Martin, who resigned to return to teaching. John D. Nyce is serving as interim academic dean for the 1988-89 school year.

Eby is married to Joyce Rutt Eby; they have two children, Carol, 22, and Scott, 21.

New history of 19th-century Mennonites

The publication of a new book by Theron F. Schlabach, Goshen College professor of history, was celebrated with a reception for the author Jan. 20 at GC.

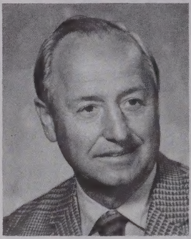
The book, Peace, Faith and Nation: Mennonites and Amish in Nineteenth-Century America, has just been published by Herald Press, Scottdale, Pa., as the second book in the series, "The Mennonite Experience in America."

"The Mennonite Experience in America" series is an effort guided by members of the Menonnite Church, the General Conference Mennonite Church and the Mennonite Brethren Church. Robert S. Kreider, North Newton, Kan., chairs the MEA editorial committee and Schlabach is the series editor. Albert Keim of Eastern Mennonite College, Harrisonburg, Va., edited the Peace, Faith and Nation volume.

The purpose of the series is to write "a social history of a religious people," Schlabach said. He has worked on his volume for more than 12 years, starting research during a sabbatical in the 1976-77 school year. In writing the new book, Schlabach included many anecdotes about Mennonite and Amish life so that it would be easier for a reader to "browse through the book," rather than reading it sequentially. As in all four books in the series, the book is intended to be a social history, with discussions of economic and political factors, rather than a history of the church as an institution.

"I tell the story of people in their communities," Schlabach said. "In the book, I look at Mennonite history in its interaction with the larger American nation. It's American history, not just Mennonite history."

The book, priced at $19.95, is on sale at Provident Bookstores.



Gingerich was athletic pioneer

Roman L. Gingerich, 69, Goshen College professor emeritus of physical education, died Jan. 15, at Greencroft Nursing Center in Goshen, after suffering from Alzheimer's disease for several years.

A member of the Goshen College faculty for 37 years, Gingerich was the first full-time paid instructor in physical education at the college. When Gingerich was only a sophomore, Dean Harold S. Bender asked him to take that position when he graduated. Gingerich established the college's physical education department; his vision led to the college's entry into intercollegiate athletic competition.

Gingerich received his bachelor's degree from Goshen College in 1941, a master's degree from the University of Iowa in 1946 and a doctoral degree from Indiana University in 1958. He served as Goshen College basketball coach and chaired the physical education department for many years.

The Mennonite Central Committee unit in Cidra, Puerto Rico, was the site of his Civilian Public Service work 1943-1945. He taught physical education at Chulalanghorn University, Bangkok, Thailand, as a Fulbright Scholar in 1964 and led a GC Study-Service Term unit in Nicaragua in 1970-71. Gingerich also had served as president of the Mennonite Camping Association.

The memorial service took place Jan. 18 in College Mennonite Church, in charge of James Waltner. Marner Miller, a friend and neighbor, read the scripture and Jonathan Roth, GC professor of biology, shared remembrances gathered from friends and former students.

Gingerich was born Dec. 28, 1919, in Berlin, Ohio. On Aug. 24, 1941, in Kalona, Iowa, he married Shirley E. Erb, who survives. Other survivors include five children: James L., Nairobi, Kenya; Sara (Mrs. John) Wengerd, Salisbury, Pa.; June (Mrs. Fred) Yoder, Goshen; Carolyn (Mrs. John) Johns, Albuquerque, N.M., and Charlotte (Mrs. Burdette) Gunden, Chelsea, Mich., and five grandchildren.

He was a member of College Mennonite Church.

Memorials may be directed to the fund for the proposed Goshen College recreation-fitness center or to Camp Amigo, 26455 Baker St. Road, Sturgis, Mich. 49091.

Hunsbergers honored at reception

Arlin and Naomi Hunsberger were honored at a Goshen College reception Jan. 12. Arlin was associate director or director of international education at GC from its beginning in 1968 until he resigned in fall, 1988. In January 1, 1987 he took a leave of absence to become director of the Haiti Agro-Forestry Outreach Program, which is based in Port-au-Prince, Haiti, and sponsored by the Pan American Development Foundation.

The Hunsbergers were unable to attend the college's ''Festival Internationale'' celebration of the 20th anniversary of the international education program in October.

''We wanted to take this opportunity to recognize Arlin's significant service as associate director and director of international education from 1968 to 1988,'' said president Victor Stoltzfus.

Smith was language teacher for 42 years

Verna Graber Smith, Goshen College assistant professor emerita of Spanish, died Feb. 9 at Goshen General Hospital. She was 86.

Mrs. Smith taught Latin and Spanish at Goshen College from 1930 until her retirement in 1972. She and her husband, Willard H. Smith, Goshen College professor emeritus of history, took leaves from their teaching responsibilities twice to serve the Mennonite Central Committee, working in Paraguay in 1944-45 and Mexico 1954-55. They also led a Goshen College Study-Service Term unit in Honduras in 1972.

She was born Nov. 30, 1902, in Noble, Iowa, to Daniel and Fannie Graber. Mrs. Smith attended Hesston (Kan.) Academy 1918-22 and graduated from Goshen College in 1928. She received a master's degree from the University of Wisconsin-Madison and also did graduate work at the universities of Colorado, Indiana and Iowa. She also taught in elementary schools in Iowa and Illinois and at Goshen High School.

Surviving are her husband and three sisters, Elizabeth Stoltzfus, Lena Graber and Esther Graber, all of Goshen. Three sisters and two brothers preceded her in death.

A memorial service was held Feb. 11 at College Mennonite Church in charge of James Waltner. Victor Stoltzfus, Goshen College president, and Robert L. Yoder, Goshen College associate professor of Spanish, spoke. Memorials may be directed to the Willard and Verna Smith Scholarship Fund at Goshen College.

Kelley and Miller assume new posts

Mardene Horst Kelley was named business manager at Goshen College, effective Jan. 1. She has served since Sept. 1 as interim business manager.

Kelley received an associates's degree in 1972 from Hesston (Kan.) College, a bachelor's degree in 1980 from Goshen College and an M.S.B.A. in 1985 from Indiana University at South Bend.

A native of Elkhart, she began working at Goshen College in 1981 and served as acting controller in 1981-82. She became controller in fall, 1985.

DeLane J. Miller was appointed controller at Goshen College effective Jan. 1.

A native of Goshen, Miller served as assistant controller from September, 1987, through Sept. 1, 1988, when she was named acting controller. She received her bachelor's degree in accounting from Goshen College in 1985. She previously worked at Crowe, Chizek & Company, Elkhart, as a staff accountant.

Miller passed the certified public accountancy examination in May, 1987.

Gunden to head international education

Ruth E. Gunden has been named Goshen College director of international education. A Goshen College professor of physical education, Gunden has served as interim director of international education since July 1, 1987. She succeeds Arlin Hunsberger.

A 1952 graduate of Goshen College, Gunden received a master's degree in 1956 and a doctoral degree in 1967 in physical education from the University of Iowa. She has chaired the GC physical education department, served as women's athletic director and coached women's basketball and tennis.

Her international experience includes leading a Study-Service Term unit in Jamaica in 1971, a one-month residence at Warsaw (Poland) Agricultural University in 1979 to study physical education and sports development in Poland, and a one-month residence in Great Britain in 1980 to study physical education and sports there.

Job opening

Goshen College seeks applicants for admissions counselor to begin June 1989. Candidates may contact Rich Gerig, director of admissions, Goshen College, Goshen, IN 46526. Application deadline: April 15.

The benefits of SST should be mutual

By Dan Hess

The Apostle Paul, an intercultural personality from Christianity's first century, urged the Philippians, "Don't just think about your own affairs, but be interested in others too."

That is a hard saying. Efficiently-run institutions are counseled to define their own interests, even to the extent of imposing those interests on others.

Consultants also tell colleges to figure out their objectives and then to adopt a strategy to meet those objectives.

Goshen College has its objectives. We work constantly to clarify them. But there are other interests to which we want to attend.

The SST program illustrates this perspective of attending to the interests of others. On the one hand, we have operated a high-quality program that helps us reach personal and institutional goals. We want SST to have good effects on us.

But from the very beginnings of SST in 1968, we thought seriously about the effects of the program upon others.

I recall that upon returning to GC from two years of SST leadership in 1970, I was "debriefed" in President Mininger's office. The most urgent matter in my mind was encapsulated in the word "reciprocity."

The case was stated — perhaps overstated — in these words: an international education program can be as exploitative as a tourist invasion, a mining expedition or a political intervention.

On that occasion and many times since, Goshen College has wrestled with questions about SST-program effectiveness — in meeting our interests and theirs. Our job wasn't made any easier as we worried not just about our students, but about Haitians, Nicaraguans, Costa Ricans, Jamaicans and later Germans, Koreans and Chinese.

It's been difficult to study the effects of SST on host countries. What do those hosts want to receive from their participation in this program? How do our behaviors modify their own lives?

Over the years I've heard my colleagues at home and abroad answer these questions with several opinions.

1. The possibility that a host country can benefit from SST is created by good policies at home.

At Goshen someone must make decisions, not only about which country to go to and the service and academic credit, but far more importantly, decisions about the kind of interaction we want to foster during the trimester. We're concerned not just with the adequacy of payment for bed and board, but the quality of friendship we share with the hosts who provide us bed and board.

2. If the interests of others are to be considered, those people must be consulted.

From South Main Street in Goshen, it's difficult to say what's best for a host country. Their interests may be concealed by a history, an agenda and a style quite baffling to us. Even our best research can yield superficial insights into the yearnings of a people who aren't able to set up their own SST trimesters in Goshen. And sometimes, in getting a glimpse of what our hosts would most like from this program, we shrink back, knowing that we can't possibly deliver. But we at least must design our program to lead into their own fruitful participation.

3. Genuine reciprocity is costly.

Just as we budget for institutional overhead at Goshen College, so we must budget for host-country benefits. This obligation of dollars is the more requisite in light of the economic inequality of the participants: students pay more for their trimester on SST than most hosts earn in a year.

But there is a larger cost, an expenditure of energy and spirit. To ask a college sophomore to modify her weekend plans, her relationships, her wardrobe for the benefit of a host family; to ask a college junior to modify his bathing habits, his hair cut, his emotional expression for the benefit of a rural town; to ask a college faculty family to leave home, to learn a new language, to interpret a foreign culture to students — this is costly, more than many an independent globetrotting backpacker would be willing to pay. SSTers must do it constantly and continually.

4. Positive effects for a host country are partly a function of our minimizing the bad effects our presence may impose.

The term "Ugly American" has evolved into a generic term, that describes any tourist or diplomat or expatriot whose ethnocentric and arrogant attitudes motivate behaviors that are repugnant. In sharp contrast is the international visitor who errs, but without intent or without malice, and even in the process of erring, seems to be asking the hosts to teach cultural adaptation. I am often impressed by our Goshen students who try hard not to offend.

5. The best long-term gains for Goshen College will be those that at the same time yield long-term gains for host countries.

What gain is it, if we should acquire exciting adventures and dramatic photographs and 12 hours of unusual college credit, while contributing nothing to international goodwill. Can we call it a worthy personal gain in Goshen if that student's SST host feels diminished?

We have a long way to go before SST is a perfectly-mutual international partnership, and yet I have been witness to many occasions when hosts and Goshen College students, in unexpected moments, partake of a communion across cultures, epiphanies made possible by the sharing of love and faith, and, in the Apostle Paul's words, "working together with one heart and mind and purpose."

Dan Hess is professor of communication and English at Goshen College. Dan and Joy Hess are currently leading an SST unit in Costa Rica. They previously led units in Costa Rica in 1968-70 and 1977-79.

Passing By

By Cathy Hockman

The dogs of Santo Domingo are thin, and duck their heads as I pass by. I see them everywhere, noses to the street, pawing among the rotting orange peels.

At the museum, a black young man with a great crooked-tooth smile explains that once perros silencios — dogs with no bark — were kept by the Indians.

They're gone now, both indios and dogs, their flesh devoured by voracious appetites. Strange new animals came from across the water; these dog, our guide says, these dog bark.

  Cowed by cuffs and hunger, the dogs of the street have never made a sound.

And, passing by, I see their broken teeth, feel my bare white ankles so vulnerable, so exposed.

About this issue

One of the frustrations of an editor is having more material for an issue than there is space in which to print it. Invariably that is the case when we want to showcase student art. Because we need to be extremely selective, we do not have essays or short stories in this creative arts issue. Examples of those genres appear in Pinchpenny Press books that you can order from the English department.

What we can include are samples from the senior art exhibits and poetry that appeared this year in the Broadside poetry series or Record creative arts issue. Our thanks to those publications and the student writers for allowing us to republish their work and to the student artists who remind us that we do not live by text alone.

Warren Dunes in November

By Marta L. Brunner

We've come at a bad time,
With good intentions,
Swaddled and plodding up her sandy steps.
Under frothing grey woolens she heaves and grumbles,
Nauseous rumbles — sick from a season
Of selling herself to oily aphrodites who Strut hot from her waves;
Of yielding up shells for glass shards,
Sand for cigarette butts.

Not minding too much the numbing
Touch of her November sighs,
We pause on her front stoop,
Hesitant, like company calling unannounced
And unbidden. She grunts from within
Like one awakened and puffy-faced
Her dunegrass mussed from a three-month slumber.

There's no warm reception today,
But something — the lusty tumble
Of her white caps, or the calico spread
Of prize skipping stones — something

Marta Brunner is a senior from Goshen, Ind.

Like a Horse

By Jonathan Mellinger

Like a horse walking through a field of sandpaper
I call your name

you notice
and turn and then say to yourself

(I can read your lips)

Hmmm, something sounded like a horse walking through a field of sandpaper

You walk away

Dad

By Cathy Hockman

In these the ice-white times
when a word shatters in the air, shatters and scatters
in the space between you and me

when the falls boil cold, furious and cold,
and foam sparkles brief on the waves

In these the ice-white times when silence wails, we bow our heads we bow to the wind, press our lips tight, and walk

we walk.

The Birthing-doll Maker

By Melissa Guerin

See the lumpy straw womb. I stitch an eye.
Cotton midwives support the head of the babe she is to bear.
I am tired. And I must listen to my children cry.

My own babies are starving. That one there — I'm afraid he will die.
I raid ancient graves for cloth. The soldier gets his share.
See the swollen straw womb. I stitch an eye.

I leave the skeletons tumbled, naked to the frowning sky.
Dry mothers in the earth! Why should they care?
I am tired. And I must listen to my children cry.

Do you destroy national treasures? If they ask me I will lie.
Anyway — to honor the souls of the dead, I always say a prayer.
See the dry straw womb. I stitch an eye.

There is no rain. The corn is gone, and my milk is dry.
They who sit in the city — why do they wonder how I dare?
I am tired. And I must listen to my children cry.

Gringos come often to haggle. Seldom do they come to buy.
Fat archaeologists! They at forty still so fair.
See the hungry straw womb. I stitch an eye.
I am tired. And I must listen to my children cry.

Youth face challenges

Today's educated youth face three challenges, the chairman of the board of the W.K. Kellogg Foundation said Sunday at the Goshen College commencement services.

Dr. Russell G. Mawby addressed 201 graduates, the Goshen College faculty and staff and the graduates' parents and friends in the Union Building.

The first challenge is "knowledge utilization," Mawby said. "In most areas of human endeavor, we know better than we do. Your generation must pioneer in blending the richness of specialized fields of study into more effective patterns for decision and action."

Lifelong learning is the second challenge. The old pattern of life in "three neat blocks — go to school, go to work, out to pasture" is "no longer adequate. You must demonstrate a commitment to lifelong learning, incorporating in your own life a continuing interaction between work, family, leisure and learning," he said.

Involvement is the third challenge. Volunteerism is a unique ingredient of American life, which gives our country "a distinctively humane quality," Mawby emphasized. "The most important way in which your life will be measured ultimately is by the ways in which you spend your leisure time. Let me encourage you to spend as much of it as you can in paying back the society that already has given so much to you."

The Kellogg Foundation, based in Battle Creek, Mich., has given away more than $1 billion since its founding in 1930. From the beginning, the foundation has particularly emphasized education in its giving. "Despite all the criticisms and all the questioning, education is still basic to, and offers the greatest opportunity for, human progress," Mawby said. "From the standpoint of the individual, education is still the way to a better life."

GC president Victor Stoltzfus presented 18 bachelor of science in nursing degrees, 183 bachelor of arts degrees, four certificates in Hispanic ministries, two early-childhood-education certificates, a certificate in recreational leadership and special certificates to the nine Chinese exchange scholars.

At the baccalaureate service Sunday morning, Stoltzfus preached the sermon, "Jesus Christ, Light of the World," based on John 1:1-18.

Alumni board meets

At its March meeting the Alumni Board focused on three areas: continuing education and communication, awards and recognition and fundraising.

Board President Ralph Lugbill '53 announced that the GC alumni office is planning two international study tours during 1990, one to Kenya and one to Central America. Reservations will not be taken for about six months, but alumni will be given first chance.

Lugbill also announced that five alumni will receive "Culture for Service Awards" at the Oct. 7 alumni banquet. Current and retired faculty members nominated persons to be charter recipients of the awards based on their exemplary lives of service and achievement. The alumni board made the final selection. Alumni will be asked to nominate persons for future awards.

The alumni board initiated graduating seniors into the ranks of alumni at the second Senior Class Banquet hosted by the board. During the program, Lugbill announced that the board would match the senior class gift.

Accident claims two students

Two Goshen College sophomores were killed in a traffic accident April 15 in Kansas.

Todd Neuenschwander and Jon O. Nussbaum, both 20 and from Kidron, Ohio, were killed in a head-on collision with a pick-up truck on Kansas Highway 50 near Strong City in Chase County. They were returning to Goshen from Hesston, Kan., where they had gone to visit friends after finishing final examinations for the winter trimester at Goshen College.

Neuenschwander and Nussbaum were roommates for the 1988-89 school year in GC's Yoder Residence Hall. Both were 1987 graduates of Central Christian High School, Kidron. A GC elementary-education major, Neuenschwander was the son of Tilman and the late Orpha Neuenschwander. He attended Sonnenberg Mennonite Church, Kidron.

Nussbaum, a business major, was the son of Curt and Gloria Nussbaum. His brother Van was a member of the Goshen College Class of 1989, which graduated April 16. Nussbaum attended Kidron Mennonite Church.

A joint memorial service for Neuenschwander and Nussbaum was held April 19 at Kidron Mennonite Church. A memorial service was held at Goshen College April 27.

Soccer Camp dates set

Dates for the 1989 GC Soccer Camp are June 12-16 for ages 13 and up and June 19-23 for ages eight to 12. Cost for the week is $80 for day camp and $175 for overnight. Overnight camp is available to anyone 11 or older.

For more information or an application form, contact Dwain Hartzler, Goshen College, Goshen, IN 46526, or call 219-535-7492.

Two 1989 GC graduates, endorsed and supported by MCC and the Open Door Community in Atlanta, Ga., are running across the United States this summer to raise awareness of homelessness and hunger in North America.

Mike Stoltzfus (left), Goshen, Ind., an interdisciplinary major, and Jon Peachey, Scottdale, Pa., a physical education major, left Lincoln City, Ore., on April 24 to begin their four-month, 3,200 mile run to Boston, Mass. They plan to run between 30 and 50 miles a day, pushing their supplies in front of them in a three-wheeled cart. They will speak on hunger and homelessness to local communities during and after the run.

Donations received above their cost will be divided equally between MCC's hunger/homelessness programs in North America and the Open Door's work with the homeless in Atlanta.

Kathy Mast

Records fall in basketball

Pert Shetler guided the women's basketball team to another Hoosier Conference for Women Conference championship. The women finished 17-7 overall and 8-2 in conference play. Sophomore Kathy Mast was named first-team All-Conference, and juniors Jan Kolb and Karen Gerber were named to the second team. Coach Shetler received her second consecutive conference Coach-of-the-Year award.

The Leafs received record-breaking performances from Mast, Kolb and junior Jan Helmuth. Mast and Kolb both bettered the previous single-season scoring mark of 411 set last year by Dawn Gerber. Kolb scored 416 points, and Mast now holds the record after hitting 480 points.

Mast also set a single-game scoring mark when she notched 33 points against Hanover. Kolb also broke the single season free throw mark by hitting 85 percent. Jan Helmuth set school records in assists for a single game (15) and single season (172).

Karen Gerber received national NAIA Scholar-Athlete recognition for her work in the classroom as well as on the court.

The men's basketball team finished the 1988-89 season with a 9-18 record, the best in the last 11 years. The squad finished the Mid-Central Conference season with a 3-7 record, good for a fourth-place tie in the six-team conference.

Senior Kevin Richie led the team in both scoring and rebounding with averages of 14.0 and 6.4 respectively. Junior Rick Lengacher, voted Most Valuable Player by his teammates and selected to the second team All-Conference, finished with a 12.6 scoring average and led the team in assists and minutes played. Junior Dave Coil also averaged in double figures for the Leafs, hitting 10.2 per game while setting a school record by hitting 58.8 percent from the field.

Other top contributors were Mark Gerber with an 8.7 scoring average and a team leading 40 steals, and Tim Miller with a 7.6 average and two All-Tournament awards. Tom Bennett, Cory Good, Randy Brenneman and Rob Eichelberger all averaged between 4.8 and 5.6 points per game. Freshmen Myles Schrag and Chad Stoltzfus saw limited action off the bench.

Campus master plan unveiled

The Goshen College Board of Overseers has approved a campus master plan that provides a guide for the construction of future campus academic buildings, roads, parking space and housing and the preservation of open areas. It also addresses such issues as the need for a visitor's reception area, the placement of trees and shrubs and campus lighting. The engineering and architectural firm, The Troyer Group, Mishawaka, Ind., prepared the master plan.

The last campus master plan was made in the mid-'60s.

The plan has immediate implications for three projects that are already on the drawing boards: the construction of an addition to the Science Building, the construction of a recreation-fitness center and the renovation of the existing Union Building in cooperation with College Mennonite Church. Work on the science addition could begin as early as September 1989, Stoltzfus said. Already $2 million of the $3.6 million cost has been raised for the addition.

One of the goals of the master plan is to enhance social interaction on campus, said Norman Kauffmann, dean of student development. The plan will achieve that goal by creating a daytime "hub" in a new dining facility in the Union and a nighttime "hub" in the recreation-fitness center. The recreation-fitness center, to be located on the southeast side of the campus, will also be easily accessible for residents of Greencroft retirement community, Kauffmann said.

Residence halls to undergo changes

GC residence halls will never be the same.

As soon as commencement was over and the students were out of their rooms, construction crews began work on a range of improvements that will make the halls more energy efficient, safe and comfortable.

Here President Stoltzfus and Merl Tyson, supervisor of the plumbing and heating renovation, look over the hot-water radiators removed from Kulp Hall.

The project also calls for installing new windows in Yoder and Coffman Halls, replacing the carpets and ceilings in selected corridors of Coffman, Westlawn, High Park and Kratz Halls, and upgrading the furniture in Kulp, Coffman and Yoder Halls.

A good news, bad news report

"The third-quarter contributions report is a good news, bad news statement," said Director of College Relations Ron Gunden.

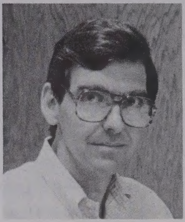
The good news is that the number of alumni and friends giving financial support to Goshen College continues to expand. At the end of the third quarter of this fiscal year, we have received 1,500 more unrestricted gifts than at this time last year, Gunden said.

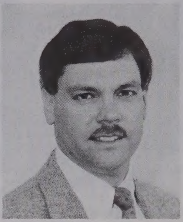
The bad news is that unrestricted contributions lag behind the pace set a year ago. "In order to meet our Goshen College Fund goal of $1.735 million, we need to receive $492,000 in the final three months — a formidable task," says Gunden. Last year the college received $396,072 in the final quarter.

Gunden noted that some of the larger contributions given last year were not repeated this year. Contributions from Mennonite Churches, Associated Colleges of Indiana, businesses and foundations have also decreased.

So far this year, nearly 7,400 gifts have been given to Goshen College. "We appreciate the generous support and advocacy that is so graciously given on behalf of the college," says Gunden.

"However, in order for us to meet our goal, we hope that many people who have already given this year will consider an additional gift, and that people who have not yet given will give generously to help meet the goal for Goshen College."





Nyce and Gerig appointed to administrative positions

Two Goshen College faculty members have been appointed to newly created administrative positions.

John D. Nyce, interim academic dean and assistant professor of mathematics, will become associate academic dean. Nyce has served as interim academic dean since Aug. 1, 1988; he joined the Goshen College faculty in 1966 and became registrar in 1967.

A 1959 graduate of Goshen College, Nyce received an M.A.T.M. from the University of Detroit in 1966. He also studied at Goshen Biblical Seminary in 1961-62 and at the Harvard University Graduate School of Education in 1976-77.

As associate academic dean, Nyce will work with John W. Eby, who will become Goshen College academic dean July 1. Among Nyce's duties will be directing the collegiate studies and advising program, retention, educational research and performing staff work for the president and the dean.

Richard L. Gerig, Goshen College director of admissions, will become director of enrollment and marketing. A member of the Goshen College faculty since 1972, Gerig served as an admissions counselor 1972-80 and director of alumni relations 1980-84. He became admissions director in 1985. He is a 1972 Goshen College graduate and received an M.Ed. degree in 1983 from Arizona State University.

As director of enrollment and marketing, Gerig will supervise the marketing task force, supervise marketing- and enrollment-related research, and assist with Uncommon Cause II, the Goshen College capital campaign.

Hispanic church is subject of studies

José Ortiz, director of the Hispanic ministries program, has published two new books and a series of videotapes. All three works deal with development of the Hispanic church. The two books are in Spanish.

¡Ven, Camina con Nosotros! (Come, Walk with Us) is an introduction to the Mennonite Church for Spanish-speaking persons. His second book, El Año Agradable Del '86 (1986 — The Pleasant Year) is a chronicle of several visits he made to Hispanic churches from coast to coast.

Ortiz's third work is a series of videotapes produced by the Mennonite Board of Missions. In the series called "Su Iglesia es Administrable" (Your Church Can Be Administered), Ortiz covers eight topics dealing with church administration. The series is designed to help pastors develop church-management skills.

Faculty changes announced

Two faculty changes were approved at the March 10-11 meeting of the Goshen College Board of Overseers.

J. Scott Armacost will join the Goshen College faculty in the fall as an assistant professor of accounting. A 1980 graduate of Ball State University, Muncie, Ind., Armacost received an M.B.A., also from Ball State, in 1988. He has been an instructor in accounting at Ball State for two years. A C.P.A., he previously worked for the Forum Group, Inc., Indianapolis, the Ball Corporation, Muncie, and Price Waterhouse's Indianapolis office.

Armacost will replace John Harmon, assistant professor of accounting, who joined the faculty in 1985. Harmon will return to private practice.

A. Frances Wenger, associate professor of nursing and chair of the division of nursing, was promoted to professor of nursing. A member of the Goshen College faculty since 1962, Wenger received her Ph.D. in nursing from Wayne State University, Detroit, Mich., in 1988.

Burkholder thesis published

Thirty-one years after it was presented to the faculty of Princeton Theological Seminary as a doctoral thesis, J. Lawrence Burkholder's The Problem of Social Responsibility from the Perspective of the Mennonite Church has been published. As a thesis, the work earned Burkholder a doctor of theology degree summa cum laude in 1958.

In a newly written introduction, Burkholder says his World War II relief efforts in China revealed the ambiguity of power. "Without power nothing could be accomplished, but when power was exercised, invariably some people were helped and others were either deprived or hurt . . . Eventually I came to see life dialetically according to which multiple demands required one to choose between equally valid but contradictory obligations."

The Institute of Mennonite Studies, which published the book, calls it "a landmark document in the ongoing Mennonite dialogue about peace, justice, power and the exercising of social responsibility." The paperback book may be ordered through the Institute of Mennonite Studies, 3003 Benham Ave., Elkhart, IN 46517, for $10 plus $1 shipping and handling in the United States and $1.50 shipping and handling for Canadian orders. It is also on sale in the Goshen College bookstore.

Blosser receives Lilly Fellowship

Don Blosser, associate professor of Bible and religion, has received a 1989-90 Lilly Endowment Faculty Open Fellowship grant to fund study during his eight-month sabbatical in 1990. Blosser, a member of the faculty since 1979, will use the $17,500 grant to study conflict resolution so that he will be qualified to teach conflict-resolution courses at GC.

Blosser and his wife Carolyn will spend the fall trimester of 1989 leading the SST unit in Chengdu, People's Republic of China. From January to June, 1990, he will study conflict resolution at the University of Colorado at Boulder.

In summer, 1990, the Blossers will live in St. Andrews, Scotland. Don Blosser plans to visit Alan Kreider at the Mennonite Center in London, England, and David and Beth Moser, Mennonite Central Committee workers in Belfast, Northern Ireland, to observe and assist in conflict mediation. The Blossers also will visit the Soviet Union for two weeks, where he hopes to make contact with faculty members at the University of Moscow to discuss how interpersonal conflict is viewed in the Soviet Union.

Roth to take MBM post

Alice M. Roth, GC executive vice president, will become vice president for overseas ministries of the Mennonite Board of Missions, Elkhart, Ind., in January, 1990. From September to December, 1989, Roth will be involved in missiological studies. She has served as GC executive vice president since 1984.

Roth was a member of the GC faculty 1976-81, when she served as alumni director 1977-1980 and director of college relations 1980-81, and rejoined the faculty in 1983 as admissions director. She and her husband Willard served MBM as missionaries in Ghana 1969-73.

Artful living

By Victor Stoltzfus

"All human lives are . . . creations . . . . There are (those) whose names will never be known to the world but whose lives appear as masterpieces to those who knew them well." (Ernest Dimmet)

Student art exhibits in the Goshen College gallery this year have directed the eye to pottery, painting, an architectural model, photography and graphic designs. It is important for faculty and friends of the college to spend time in the gallery and reflect on what students "see," just as we read the student newspaper for one source of what students think.

But beyond art as communication within community, it also evokes our more general aesthetic response. An artistic dimension enrichs all aspects of our lives.

One of the desired learning outcomes for students at Goshen College is "an understanding of the transcendent reality of aesthetic and spiritual experience." Such reality is focused and most obvious in the fine arts, but it also follows us in special moments of work, human relations and worship. It ranges from sophisticated to simple. One of our very popular folk-art exhibits in the gallery in recent years was a collection of artful writing.

Authors who write on varied topics realize that the measurable, material world only takes them part way to reality. Hence the many book titles with the preface "the art of . . . ." You can read about the art of Japanese management, batting .300, loving, clear thinking, conversation, leadership and many more topics.

Why refer to this mysterious extra something in everyday life as art? In Max DePree's fine book, Leadership is an Art, he argues that leadership is "learned over time, not simply by reading books. Leadership is more tribal than scientific, more a weaving of relationships than an amassing of information." In short, artful leadership transcends our attempt to capture it in a formula and teach it in a day. Leadership by the numbers alone violates an organization just as surely as painting by the numbers violates art.

Erich Fromm's reference to the art of loving picks up on the themes of an artist's discipline and dedication. The demands of giving mature love are contrasted to the luck of "falling" in love. "After theory and practice are mastered . . . there must be nothing in the world more important than the art." Music, drama, and painting all require years of apprenticehip. A single-minded focus on important goals is the key to excellence in all areas of endeavor, but in the arts it is especially apparent.

Artful living touches the human spirit as well as our work. Spirituality in this sense is not a specifically religious sensibility. It is that capacity within all people that responds to beauty and ugliness. A spiritual person is attuned to other human spirits and the transcendent realities of beauty, wonder, love and pain. It is an antidote to the ordinary. It repairs the ravages of stress. As nutrition is important to the physical body, the human spirit must be nourished as well. The fine and performing arts enhance this part of our basic humanity. They help make us whole.

James B. Nelson distinguishes between spirituality in general and Christian sprituality. "Everyone has, at any given point in life, a spiritual shape. Christian spirituality (is) that patterning of life around those experiences of God in the faith community centered in Christ." Just as general spirituality transcends the material world, a Christian spirituality transcends the fragmentary spiritualities that are less than God.

Artful living expresses aesthetic sensitivity. The sounds, sights and textures of nature and the artistic visions that playfully reorder nature nourish us. That inner nourishment then expresses itself in conversation, at work, in our hobbies, in a flower bed, in worship. The arts nourish a sensibiity toward art and life that helps us to find each other, and if we permit, the creative God in whose image we are formed.

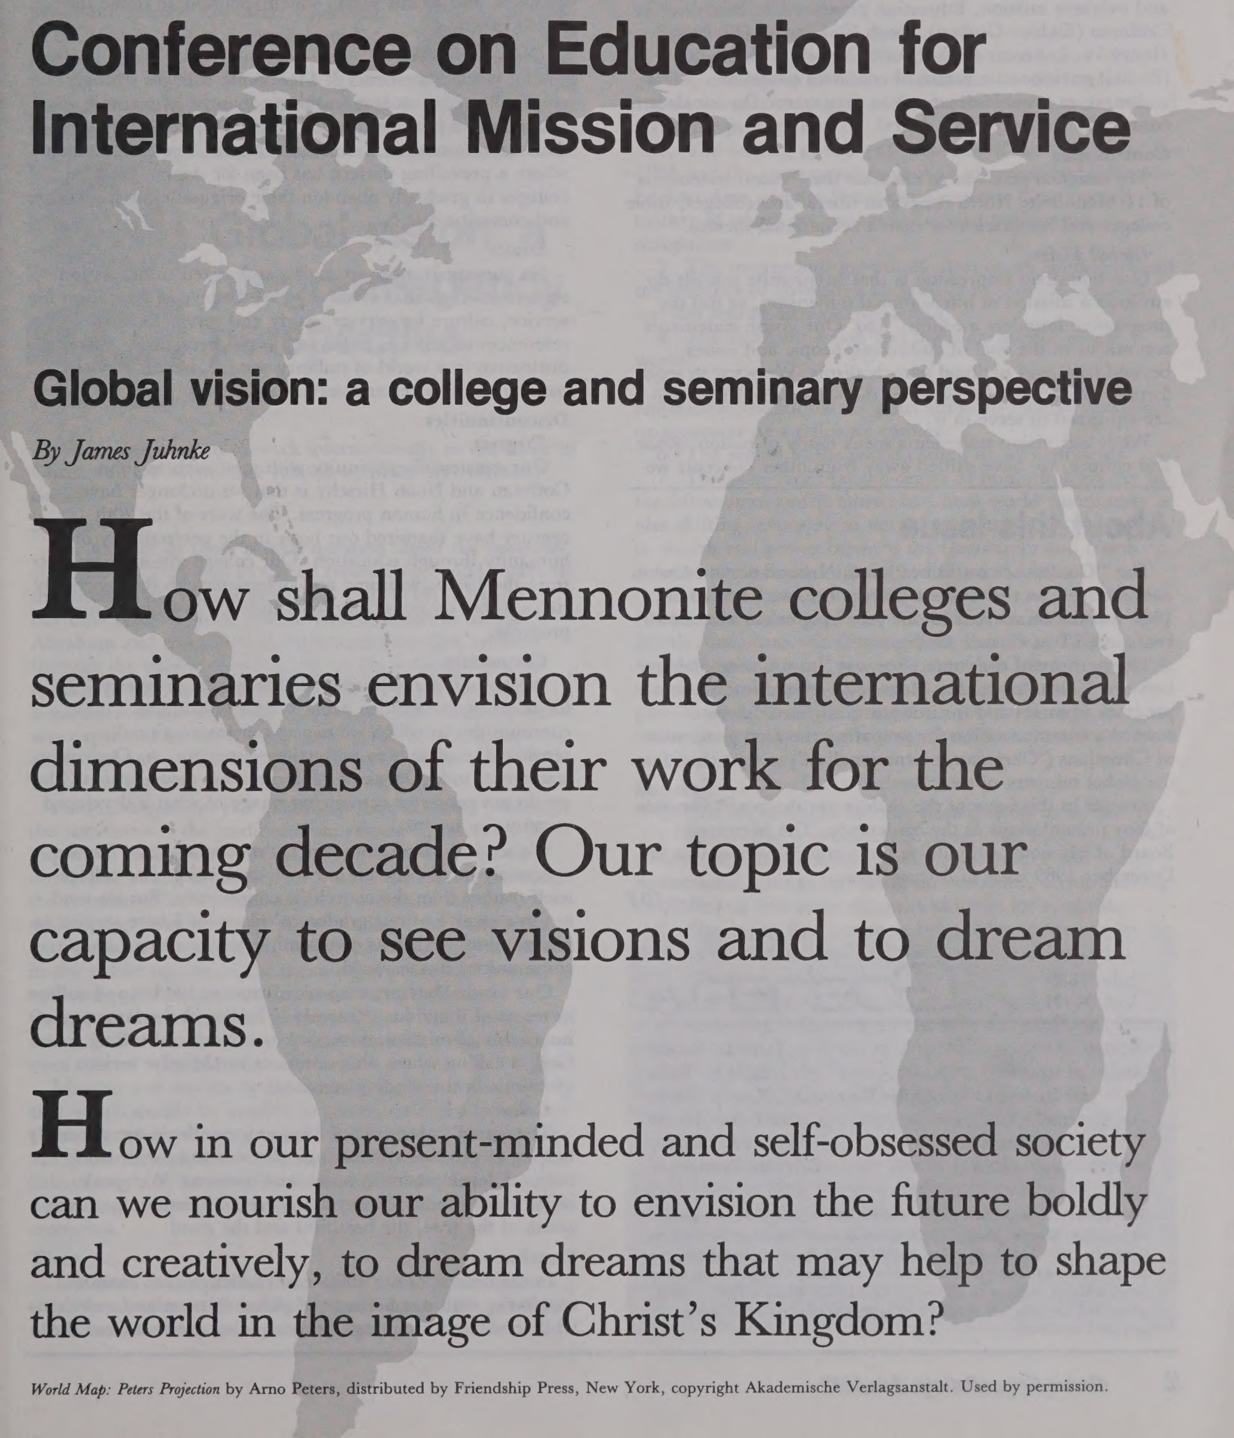
Conference on Education for International Mission and Service



Global vision: a college and seminary perspective

By James Juhnke

How shall Mennonite colleges and seminaries envision the international dimensions of their work for the coming decade? Our topic is our capacity to see visions and to dream dreams.

How in our present-minded and self-obsessed society can we nourish our ability to envision the future boldly and creatively, to dream dreams that may help to shape the world in the image of Christ's Kingdom?

World Map: Peters Projection by Arno Peters, distributed by Friendship Press, New York, copyright Akademische Verlagsanstalt. Used by permission.

At issue

Nearly a hundred years ago our founding parents set North American Mennonite higher education in motion with a burst of expansive envisioning that linked education and overseas mission. Education pioneers like John S. Coffman (Elkhart-Goshen), Noah C. Hirschy (Bluffton), Henry W. Lohrentz (Tabor) and Cornelius H. Wedel (Bethel) envisioned a future of confident progress.

Are we as capable dreamers as they were? Do our dreams connect in any ways with theirs?

Continuities

My assigned task was to examine the ''vision statements'' of 11 Mennonite North American liberal-arts colleges, Bible colleges and seminaries for their international themes.

Global Vision

One dominant impression is that Mennonite schools do envision a mission of international dimension, as did the progressive founders a century ago. Our vision statements commit us to the goal of embracing people and issues beyond local and national parochialisms. We want to send forth students who are aware of the wider world and who are equipped to serve in it.

While our vision statements speak easily of nation, globe and culture, we have shifted away from other concepts we once favored. For example, we have virtually abandoned the concept of ''world'' as a moral opposite of the church. We seem to be fleeing from a discredited church/world dualism, and so our vision statements seldom name the world as world.

College and Church

The vision statements of Mennonite colleges strongly emphasize their rootage in the Anabaptist-Mennonite tradition and their connection to the Mennonite church. This commitment is notable in a North-American context where a prevailing pattern has been for denominational colleges to gradually abandon their original church identity and commitments.

Service

No concept is more strongly emphasized in our vision statements than that of service. We believe in education for service, culture for service, study and service. Our references to service, however, do not necessarily make us distinctive in a world of military service, health services, community services and service industries.

Discontinuities

Progress

Our greatest discontinuity with men such as John Coffman and Noah Hirschy is that we no longer have confidence in human progress. The wars of the 20th century have shattered our hope in the perfectibility of humanity through education. Our college vision statements from the 1980s, winsome and upbeat though they earnestly strive to be, do not testify to confidence in global human progress.

Community

We are additionally separated from our progressive founders by our eroded capacity to envision the communities in which we expect our internationally-sensitized graduates to make their contribution. Our vision statements today speak of ''international development,'' but we do not project a convincing image of what a developed community means.

We tend to reserve the concept of ''community'' more concretely for the life on our own campuses. The college itself (rather than the church) is community. But we tend not to conceive of our graduates' places of future service as communities, either as communities of the church or as communities in the world.

Our vision statements speak of student life beyond college in terms of individual ''careers.'' Fading is the language of international missionary service as a sacrificial calling from God, a calling whose abandonment would raise serious questions in the sending community.

Culture

The vision statements of Mennonite colleges are generally lacking in positive affirmations of a mission for broad cultural development at home and overseas. We speak much more readily of service, peace and justice, than we speak of the true, the beautiful and the good.

Conclusion

In the decade of the 1990s our challenge is to maintain continuity with our heritage of global mission and service, while creatively adapting and borrowing the best from the

About this issue

The ''Conference on Education for International Mission and Service'' on the Goshen College campus May 25-27, 1989 was the final event in our year-long celebration of 20 years of SST at Goshen College.

The purpose of the conference was ''to promote dialogue between North American, Mennonite-related international program agencies and institutions of higher education toward a common vision for preparing the next generation of Christians ('Christian internationalists') to participate in the global ministry of the church.''

Articles in this issue of the Bulletin are shortened versions of four presentations at the conference. The Mennonite Board of Missions will publish the complete versions in the December 1989 issue of Mission Focus.

Global vision: a program-agency perspective

By John A. Lapp

What does it mean to work internationally in the name of Christ and for Mennonite-related agencies over the next decade.

Mission

For most of us there is little question about the necessity of mission. "God was in Christ reconciling," and "gave us the ministry of reconciliation" (II Cor. 5:19). Mission in our time continues the process God initiated in the call of Abraham and continued in the community God created through the covenant as "a light to the nations." It was focused in the revelation of Jesus whose life and death demonstrated the compassionate heart of the universe and was expanded by the witness of the church, which has embodied and announced in every century that reconciliation with God was, is and will be.

I envision mission as "gaining ground for God" through the testimony of the traditionalists among us; through the important ministry of personal evangelism; through the nurture of younger people into lives of discipleship; through the creation of new communities of commitment; by embodying compassion for the victimized, the marginalized and the powerless people of the world; by joining the debate in the public square on the meaning of peace and justice, and through "the penetration of meaning" (Kenneth Cragg) within cultures in disarray, one way of bringing "all things in heaven and on earth together under one head, even Christ" (Eph. 1:10).

Mission and service agencies make explicit in their work that which should be implicit in the life of every follower of Christ, in every congregation of the faithful. The agencies are given the tasks that congregations and conferences believe ought to be done but that require the corporate discerning of God's will and our time and the pooling of resources.

Time

The main forces of our time will continue to dominate the '90s: the threat of nuclear destruction and the possibility of environmental catastrophe; the lopsidedness of the world's economic situation; the declining balances in the world food account and the threat of more starvation; the increasing influence of technology in production, transport, services and knowledge.

Seven themes leap out at me.

1. The growing sense of inadequacy, the failure of nerves, exhaustion of modern ideologies in the face of enormous environmental, technological, social, political and economic problems.

2. The waning power and influence of the USSR and the USA and the corresponding growth of power and influence by East Asia and the European Economic Community, neither of whom are presently hobbled by imperial obligations.

3. The tremendous growth of cities on all continents and the inability of governing authorities to provide essential services amidst rising expectations.

4. The interconnection and interdependence of the world.

5. A profound yearning for meaning that often emphasizes traditional religious authority, fundamentalisms or generates new religious entities.

6. The reality of the world church on all continents.

7. The discovery that the center of numerical gravity for the Mennonite and Brethren in Christ world community is also shifting, exposing as never before the great disparities in wealth and power between the Germanics and North Asians versus South Asians, Africans and Latins.

What lies ahead is the continued decline of the European-American dominance. The '90s will be the time when we North Americans will finally realize that indeed "progress is the last superstition," to use Christopher Lasch's words. At the same time, there is a corresponding growth of globalization, "a world process . . . that relates all local and immediate contexts of whatever description to new common realities."

Strategy

Certain styles might become strategies for us in the '90s.

1. Recovering a genuinely incarnational style of witness, as salt and light in congregational, conference and institutional settings by taking up residence, accompanying the suffering and supporting the struggle for survival.

2. Preserving the essence of being Mennonite amidst the maze of denominational and parachurch mission organizations.

3. Recognizing the presence of the church on all continents, our approach to mission will increasingly be one of sharing our story and learning other stories to enrich our understanding of the Gospel and strengthening the church on location.

4. Rediscovering the implications of the church as a minority without cultural or societal supports.

5. Being part of the rich minority of the world-wide community of faith imposes special obligations for enhancing global relationships.

6. Concerning human well-being and the integrity of creation, the church at all levels will intensify its witness in the public arena.

7. Discerning the role of religion in the making of

19th century commitment — 21st century perspective

By Nancy Heisey

"We are much more concerned with the attitude of people who come than with their background. Workers should come, not as parents, but as brother and sisters. They must be open to learn. People who say, 'We have truth' should not come."

— Guatemalan professor

When we discuss what the next generation of Christian internationalists should look like, we are expressing by the very title our own ambivalence. We believe that we should be a part of God's work throughout the world in the years ahead, but we are not sure what part we should play.

Defined briefly, 19th-century commitment includes a willingness to face the unknown regarding location, job description and the way personal needs will be met. It includes openness to a long-term commitment, with the knowledge that that commitment may not enhance one's career.

A 21st-century perspective includes accepting the ownership of others over one's work and the undesirability of putting a personal or organizational stamp on one's presence; moving beyond denominationalism to participation in the work of the church of Christ, and earnestly seeking fresh and positive approaches to the modern realities that challenge this church — secularism, religious pluralism, religious fundamentalism and Marxism/post-Marxism.

From conversations with people in 45 countries, we learned four clusters of attributes needed by those who are going to do service and mission work around the world.

Physical attributes

Service and mission workers need to be in good physical health. They also need to be able to deal with illness, and with the reality that health care systems in other parts of the world will be different. They need to be willing to be sick at times, especially while they are adjusting to a new climate and new "bugs," and sorting out ways in which they can accept local hospitality without putting themselves constantly at risk. While physical health should be the norm, it is also possible that being ill itself provides an opportunity to be served and to understand better.

Education attributes

An important characteristic of international mission and service workers is both to have a skill to use and the patience and willingness to do nothing, or to do something for which they are less skilled.

In addition to technical skills, biblical training, the ability to preach and the ability to use concepts from the social sciences are important skills for international workers. The tools that social sciences — anthropology, sociology, psychology — make available often provide what workers need to ask the right questions about their new environments and relationships. When those tools push workers to plan too far ahead of those they work with, they can be a hindrance to the real task at hand.

Absolutely essential is language ability and cultural understanding. Learning from the local setting and the ability to use skills are intimately intertwined. One Tanzanian pastor said: "We ask that people stay long enough that they can first learn from us and then use this learning in their work."

Psychological-emotional attributes

North-American workers need the ability to make peace with the way things are done in the new culture. That means a willingness to develop a bi- or multicultural personality.

Flexibility is the psychological characteristic of highest value, particularly in relationship to pressure put on expatriate workers by government and to the way expatriates work under local and national church structures. A Colombian pastor said of North Americans, "We want them to come not as pastors of a newly emerging congregation, but as partners in the leadership team."

Spiritual attributes

"The missionary who comes should be truly converted," said a Zairean church leader. Almost all those we talked to put an emphasis on the centrality of commitment to the teachings of the Bible and a willingness to teach only what the Bible says, without adding cultural or religious values to it. The importance of belief in Jesus and a true presentation of Jesus were also frequently mentioned.

Another aspect of "true conversion" is having an attitude of repentance. Workers should be willing to find ways to express repentance for past wrongs whether or not they themselves have personally been involved.

Mission and service workers should also be willing to give themselves to ministries of listening and hope. A Nigerian university professor remembered an old missionary: "We would see him sitting down to talk with crippled and blind people. He could not change their situation, but by taking time for them he gave them hope."

People we met also talked about the call to be peacemakers and what forms it could take for expatriate mission and services workers in situations of conflict. "We need your emphasis on biblical living, strong fellowship and political critique in light of the Bible," said a Hong Kong pastor.

The spiritual attributes workers need involve two paradoxes: first, they must both know what they believe and be open to all perspectives; second, they must teach the biblical message, but they must speak that message in terms of the context where it is being received. Western mission and service workers must be encouraged to develop the ability to survive and even thrive in the midst of such tension.

Nancy Heisey will become associate executive secretary, Mennonite Central Committee, at the end of August. This article is based on interviews with people around the world carried out in a study project that she and Paul Longacre did on behalf of mission and service agencies of the Mennonite Church.

By Delores Friesen

The statements of purpose, objectives and goals of our colleges and seminaries tell us what they are trying to do. When they speak of attributes they talk about things like developing "a spirit of openness," "developing the ability to care," "a stance of lifelong learning," "the ability to reflect critically," "the building of community," and being "able to have the real-world experiences impact career choice." They also talk about students growing in self-understanding, self-confidence and self-acceptance.

To sort and focus these attributes, I turned to Dean Freudenberger's four principles of change: 1) heightening awareness; 2) mobilizing resources; 3) developing models; 4) challenging structures.

Good education does all four of those, usually in that order. However, most of the programs I read about and most of the schools I experienced myself stopped with number one.

But it's not enough to heighten awareness. Let's go on and mobilize resources. We need to create students, church members, congregations, pastors and counselors who know how to tap into the resources, whether they are in Africa, China, the social science department, the agricultural department, CEDA, MEDA or wherever.

That means not only economic and development resources but spiritual resources, too. African Christians told us, "You Americans don't teach the whole gospel. We see Jesus healing. You just talk about what Jesus taught. You don't show us or do what Jesus did."

We need to create a climate in our colleges and seminaries that will help people to be able to think on their feet, to be creative, to seek solutions, to relate and utilize community resources and to be assertive on behalf of the poor. We need people who are able to open up options and offer choices.

Once we have located resources, both internal and external, and mobilized the community, we need to develop models. What might it look like? One of the college philosophy statements says, "intercultural experience is the best way we have to work at peace." That's developing a model. That's saying that part of peace-making is learning to know people who are different than myself.

I think we need to look at our model of faculty. When will our faculty be international? We send all the students overseas, but we still haven't brought nonwestern teachers into our faculties and staff.

We also need to look at our models of international education. If students take a three-week tour to Russia, are we trying to expose them to global interdependence or are we just trying to give them a taste of the USSR? Are we trying to inoculate them, like a shot for yellow fever or AIDS, so that they won't catch the real vision? Do they get just enough exposure that they don't need to change?

One seminary student who attended two of our seminaries, felt that there was no time to be, no time to reflect, because there was so much to read and write and do. Many of the catalog statements emphasize developing the self-understanding and self-confidence of our students as a major goal of the international-education experience. Are these the models that we want to work under?

Finally, we need to challenge the structures. Perhaps we're looking in the wrong place when we're training all of these young people. What about the people who are older and more experienced?

I saw a marvelous ad entitled "Brain Child" with a photograph of a woman with a very wrinkled face. The copy says, "She's a problem solver who masters complex situations quickly. She's experienced, but has an insatiable curiosity for new ideas. . . . Informed employers judge people by ability, not their date of birth. . . . Use the experience of a lifetime."

Perhaps we could challenge the structures and have our colleges and seminaries think about the many older people with the time and motivation for service and intercultural interaction. Maybe we could come up with new models for using older volunteers that challenge our ageism.

Is it possible to change structures or do we just want to change the individual? What about advocacy and justice in our world where interdependence is on a global scale?

In addition to the North American catalogs and brochures, I was given three little booklets from Asia. They say that persons need to be trained in theology in their own settings, for example, train Asians in Asia. All three invite us to come over and join them in their setting. Perhaps our centers of training for international education need to shift to institutions in the non-western world.

Finally, attributes from the New Testament can be resources for us as we challenge our structures and focus our models of education. "But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, gentleness and self control." (Gal. 5:22). ". . . clothe yourself with compassion, kindness, humility, gentleness and patience . . . forgive whatever grievances you may have against one another. . . . And over all these virtues put on love . . . And whatever you do, whether in word or deed, do it all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God the Father through Him" (Col. 3:12-17).

cultural and political traditions, mission will mean greater attention given to understanding the contexts of traditional religious expressions and ethnicity.

I suspect that mission in the '90s will be both more identifiable in terms of radical Christianity and less denominational as the missionary, global, peace party becomes more conspicuous in every Christian grouping.

Whatever our strategy, Parker Palmer is surely correct in stating that our task is "simply to love the world in every possible way — to love the world as God did and does."

John A. Lapp is executive secretary of Mennonite Central Committee.

Joe R. Lopez and C. Sylvia Reyes, Corpus Christi, Texas, April 22.

Brian Pfile, Ridott, Ill., and Jodi Meabon, North East, Pa., May 26.

Bruce Unruh, Niles, Mich., and Lori Froese, LaJunta, Colo., Aug. 19.

Birth

Patrick and Carla Inbody Bailey, Goshen, Luke Patrick, May 28.

Notes

John W. Kolb graduated April 29 with special honors from Kendall College of Art and Design in Grand Rapids, Mich., with a B.F.A. in environmental design.

Christine Landis is in the social-work graduate program at Indiana University, Indianapolis.

Linda Metzger has been named a 1989 Woodruff Fellow by the Emory University Nell Hodgson Woodruff School of Nursing. She will use the fellowship to obtain a master of nursing degree in family nurse practitioning. She has been a staff nurse for Koscuisko Community Hospital and worked part time as nursing supervisor for the South Whitley Clinic.

Alumni Weekend plans

Goshen College alumni are cordially invited to attend Alumni Weekend activities, Oct. 6-8. Saturday noon, Oct. 7, is the time for five-year class reunions to meet separately. All alumni are invited to the Saturday evening banquet where five Goshen College alumni will be given first-ever "Culture for Service" awards.

Local groups are planning for each of the five-year reunion classes. Committees are coordinating activities for every class year ending with a 4 or a 9. The admissions office is again putting together special activities for children, kindergarten through grade eight. In addition, departments will be conducting open houses on Saturday morning.

So plan now to attend Alumni Weekend — and bring the entire family.

Marriage

Chad Klopfenstein, Bellefontaine, Ohio, and Tracy Gerber '90, Mio, Mich., April 22.

Note

David Jeschke graduated with a B.S. in computer science from New York University on May 18. During the summer months, he is working with Microsoft in Seattle, Wash. In the fall, he plans to begin a graduate program at the University of Texas in Austin.

1990-91

Marriages

Trent Hostetler, Wakarusa, Ind., and RaCinda Wilfong '91, Goshen, April 15.

Russell Hunsberger, Nappanee, Ind., and Rebecca Litwiller '90, Paxton, Ill., May 13.

Faculty and staff

Norman Roth (staff '64-78), husband of Sarah Roth, Aloha Park, Lot 79, 3100 Hawthorne St., Sarasota, Fla. 33579, April 30.

Births

Darrell and Beth Otto (staff '87-88), Middlebury, Ind., Derrick Lee, April 15.

Courtney and Christena Herschberger Stump (staff '81-86), Goshen, Matthew Lyn, June 3.

Notes

Allen and Maryane Ropp Slagel (staff '70-88), Goshen, were honored at a 50th-wedding anniversary open house in June.

Elizabeth Soto (faculty '86-89) has been named assistant secretary of the Latin America and Caribbean department of the overseas department at Mennonite Central Committee in Akron, Pa.

1990 study tours

The Goshen College Alumni Association is pleased to announce two faculty-led international study-tours scheduled in 1990 for alumni, parents and friends.

Kenya

Late June 1990 is the departure date for a study tour to Kenya. Led by professor emerita of music Mary Oyer, the group will spend two and one-half weeks absorbing traditional music, experiencing Kenya's rich cultural and natural diversity including game parks, and visiting Mennonite Central Committee economic development projects.

Dr. Oyer taught at Goshen College — music and visual arts, advanced courses in history of music and cello — 1945-87. She has traveled, studied and taught extensively in Africa, primarily in Kenya. This tour is limited to 25 and will cost $3,400 to $3,800.

Costa Rica

Another group will travel to Costa Rica in August 1990 for a 10-day experience led by professor of anthropology Ron Stutzman and his wife, Phyllis. The Stutzmans will be in Costa Rica as SST leaders next year, staying on to lead this tour.

Tour participants will travel to some of the SST service and learning sites such as a banana plantation, will attend lectures by Costa Rican professors and government officials and will have opportunity to visit host families of former SSTers. This group is limited to 20 and will cost $1,500 to $1,800 each.

Both study tours are designed by the leaders and Lois K. Bare, director of alumni relations, in response to requests from people wanting to experience another culture with GC friends and faculty in a "non-touristy" fashion.

The tours will combine in-country travel, cultural attractions, study led by experienced faculty and a chance to be with former classmates and friends in unique learning situations.

If you are interested in receiving information about one of these unique travel adventures, complete the form below and return it to the Alumni Office.

GC goes to Normal '89

You are invited to a reception for all Goshen College alumni, students, parents and friends at the Mennonite General Assembly at Normal, Ill.

This late-evening event will be an informal gathering of current and former faculty, staff, students and friends. Plan to join us on Thursday, Aug. 3 at 9 p.m., to chat with President Victor Stoltzfus and other administrators and faculty.

The location will be announced in Assembly publicity.

Lauren Friesen, associate professor of drama, announced that the Goshen College players along with a number of alumni will be presenting a major production at Normal '89. The play, "The Love of John," based on the writer of the Gospel of John and the community of believers he formed, will be performed twice on Wednesday, Aug. 2, at 1:30 p.m. and 9 p.m. —LKB

Koyama presents keynote address

Christians must seek "two benedictions, one from God and the other from humanity," to avoid extremes in ministry and service, a Japanese theologian said May 25 at Goshen College.

Kosuke Koyama, a world-renowned theologian who teaches at Union Theological Seminary in New York City, gave the keynote address at the Conference on International Mission and Service at the college. He is the author of Waterbuffalo Theology and many other works.

"World history is being reorganized in our day," Koyama told the conference. "Our languages, religions and cultures are going through a process of unprecedented change."

Because of this change, "some of the great Christian symbols are being challenged," Koyama said.

Among those symbols is Noah's ark, a symbol of "safety and salvation."

"The symbol of an ark is dramatic and inspiring," the theologian noted, "but it is troublesome since it inevitably suggests that I-am-in-and-you-are-out. To say this is self-righteous.

"For many centuries, Christian mission has suffered from such a subtle and sometimes outright self-righteousness. Christians seem to have felt a secure sense of salvation only when they can see 'non-Christians' drowning en masse," he added.

Instead, Christians should adopt the picture of the earth taken from outer space by the Apollo 11 astronauts as their vision of an ark, Koyama said.

"Our planet itself is the ark. Take a good look at the earth navigating in the infinite ocean of the universe! Our ecumenism and missiology must assume a global and ecological character."

Another symbol being challenged is the symbol of "Exodus," the book in the Bible which recounts God's rescue of the children of Israel from slavery in Egypt.

Exodus 3:7 is the "foundation passage for liberation theology," Koyama noted. "Here salvation is achieved by 'coming out' of Egypt. This is indeed an awe-inspiring religious and political symbol.

"Yet, salvation cannot be portrayed only in terms of 'coming out' of troubled situations. Biblical theology suggests another image of 'staying in' . . . Is 'coming out' a solution? Yes. It is, but not always. What happens to the country left behind?"

The theologian added, "Whether 'coming out' or 'staying in,' the end result is that we must learn to live in and reform unjust societies to become just. . . I would suggest that the 'staying in' is more Christologically significant than the 'coming out.' "

Also being challenged are the symbols of God as a male figure, God as a white God, the symbol of the enemy, and the linear progression of history, Koyama said. —LLK

Service learning is conference focus

Educators from 15 U.S. colleges and universities called on President George Bush and Congress to include a provision for international learning and service in "any legislation establishing a program of national service" April 28 at a Wingspread Conference on "The Role of Service Learning in International Education" at Racine, Wis.

Convened under the sponsorship of GC, the W. K. Kellogg Foundation, Battle Creek, Mich., and the Johnson Foundation, Racine, the conference took place April 26-28 at Wingspread, the Johnson Foundation's conference center.

The institutions represented include Antioch College, Yellow Springs, Ohio; Berea (Ky.) College; DePauw University, Greencastle, Ind.; Fifth College, La Jolla, Calif.; GC; Hamline University, Minneapolis, Minn.; Maricopa Community College, Phoenix, Ariz.; Michigan State University, East Lansing; St. Augustine's College, Raleigh, N.C.; Scottsdale (Ariz.) Community College; Stanford University, Menlo Park, Calif.; Texas A & M, College Station; Wheaton (Ill.) College, and the universities of California (Berkeley, Santa Barbara and Santa Cruz campuses), Minnesota and Notre Dame.

Goshen College president emeritus J. Lawrence Burkholder spoke on GC's program, which began in 1968 under president emeritus Paul Mininger.

In other sessions, directors of study-abroad programs at Goshen College, Michigan State and Stanford universities gave presentations on their programs.

Also speaking were representatives and administrators from Campus Compact, the Council on International Educational Exchange, the Mennonite Central Committee, the National Association for Foreign Student Affairs, the National Society for Internships and Experiential Learning, the Overseas Development Network, the Partnership for Service-Learning, the Peace Corps and Volunteers in Asia.

Participants discussed the research on how experiential learning affects student development and exchanged ideas in small groups on ways to advance their programs.

Nobel laureate at GC

In Latin America, "misery changes names from country to country, but it always has the same face," Adolfo Pérez Esquivel, winner of the 1980 Nobel Peace Prize, said April 24 in a speech at Goshen College.

The native of Argentina spoke to a crowd of approximately 200 persons as part of the Frank and Betty Jo Yoder Public Affairs Lecture Series.

Pérez Esquivel, 57, a Catholic pacifist, heads the Peace and Justice Service of Latin America, an organization that sponsors programs in community organization, healthcare and education in 10 countries in South America. For his work, the Argentine military junta had him imprisoned and tortured for 14 months in 1977-78 and later subjected to house arrest.

The face of Latin American misery is the face of poverty, unemployment and oppression, Pérez Esquivel said. Those who search for a solution to the continent's problems must re-define their concepts of peace and of human rights.

Currently, the gravest problem in Latin America is the foreign, or "external" debt, Pérez Esquivel said. In Argentina (which has a foreign debt of $45 billion), the debt is not called the "external" debt but the "eternal" debt because the debt is believed to be unpayable.

However, the Nobel Prize-winner believes that even if the debt were forgiven, the countries of Latin America would accumulate a foreign debt of equal size within one year because of their large-scale arms purchases.

Another grave problem is the policy of the United States government towards Central America and South America, which the Argentine called a policy of "permanent aggression." Although criticizing the U.S. government, Pérez Esquivel, who follows the tenets of non-violence of Mahatma Gandhi, also criticized those who want "to make a revolution from one day to another, or who want to make a revolution over a cup of coffee. "I don't believe in the idea of a just war," he said. "There are just causes, but there can never be a just war."

Chinese exchange scholars depart

The nine Chinese scholars who had studied at GC since August, 1988, departed for China June 9 from Chicago's O'Hare Airport. They arrived safely in Chengdu June 11.

The nine had been scheduled to leave Goshen June 9 since their arrival, according to the terms of GC's exchange agreement with the Education Commission of Sichuan province, People's Republic of China.

However, because of the imposition of martial law and the repression of the pro-democracry movement in Beijing, both GC officials and the nine scholars themselves were concerned about the scholars' safety if they returned. Ruth Gunden, GC director of international education, communicated several times with the Education Commission by telex after the imposition of martial law May 15.

Goshen College received a long telex on June 8 from the Education Commission, which described the situation in both Shanghai and Chengdu as "stable." In addition, a representative of the Education Commission telephoned the nine the same night from Chengdu. The Education Commission assured the nine that their status as university teachers was unchanged and that their families were safe.

The campus community observed a one-hour period of silent prayer and meditation June 6 as an expression of sadness over the deaths and violence in China.

The GC International Education Division continues to prepare to send a 21-student group to Sichuan in August. However, the college is monitoring the situation closely and exploring other options in case sending the group becomes inappropriate. —LLK

Ten students explore the pastorate

Ten Goshen College students are getting a first-hand look at the pastorate this summer.

The seven women and three men are participating in the Ministry Inquiry Program — an internship designed to help them explore the pastorate as a vocational choice. The program provides students with intense three-month exposure to pastoral ministry in a congregational setting with a supervising pastor.

Participants receive a partial tuition scholarship contributed from the congregation, conference, college and Lilly Endowment.

The 10 Goshen students and their assignments are: Sandy Boshart, Elkhart, Ind., interdisciplinary major, assigned to Sunnyside Mennonite Church, Elkhart, Ind.; Miriam Burkholder, Chambersburg, Pa., a nursing and Bible and religion major, assigned to Parkview Mennonite Church, Kokomo, Ind.; Angie Bauman Clemens, Bloomington, Ill., a music education major, assigned to College Mennonite Church, Goshen; Sue Conrad, Perkasie, Pa., Bible and religion major, assigned to Blooming Glen (Pa.) Mennonite Church; Karen Gerber, Dalton, Ohio, a biology major, assigned to Kidron (Ohio) Mennonite Church; Melissa Guerin, Bath, N.Y., English major and TESOL minor, assigned to Pleasant Valley Mennonite Church, Hammondsport, N.Y.; Ingrid Hess, Goshen, a psychology and art major, assigned to Jubilee Christian Fellowship, Richmond, Va; Ron Krabill, Goshen, communication and peace studies major, assigned to Portland (Ore.) Mennonite Church; Kendall Newswanger, Goshen, an interdisciplinary major, assigned to Berkey Avenue Mennonite Church, Goshen; and Kim Stjernholm, Boulder, Colo., an elementary education major, assigned to First Mennonite Church, Denver, Colo. —JDY

Spring sports report

Baseball

The Goshen baseball squad posted a 11-21 record under second-year coach DeVon Hoffman. The Leafs' statistics were similar to last year's 17-22-1 team, but they were unable to put together good pitching and timely hitting to improve on their record. The team batting average dropped to .279 from last year's .301, but the on-base percentage actually increased from .412 to .416.

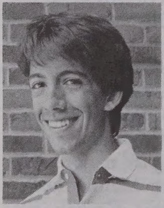
Track

The Goshen College track season was highlighted by several impressive individual performances from the young squad. Sophomore Dave Maugel captured first place in the javelin in the Mid-Central Conference meet with a throw of 161'3''. Maugel also captured a first in the javelin at the Butler Invitational, setting a school record with a throw of 167'7''. This was the first year Maugel has thrown the javelin, so Leafs field coach Sue Roth has high hopes that he can add to his already impressive marks.

The Goshen women broke several school records. Junior Kathy Klopfenstein broke the shot put record with a toss of 39'1''. Klopfenstein captured firsts in both the Hoosier Conference for Women conference meet and the District-21 state meet. Senior Aletha Stahl lowered three school records that she already held in the 1500 meters (5:00.44), 3000 meters (11:14.76), and the 5000 meters (19:12.84) First-year student Kathy Howe set the school record in the 800 meters with a time of 2:27.66.



Frank Hess

Tennis

Frank Hess represented Goshen College and District 21 at the NAIA national tennis meet held in Kansas City. Hess qualified for the tournament by winning the District-21 singles title last fall. Hess won his first match at the national meet by defeating Peter Bell of Lyndon State College (Vt.) 6-1, 6-1. Hess then met Darren Goldberg of Charleston (S.C.) College in the second round. Hess jumped out to an early 4-0 lead. But Goldberg, the tourney's No. 20 seed, rallied to take the match 6-4, 6-2.

Goshen was also very well represented at the national awards banquet honoring the tennis scholar-athletes. Of the nearly 150 scholar-athletes chosen, four were from Goshen. Seniors Susan Hunsberger, Goshen, and Kim Leuz, Elkhart, Ind., were among the top 10 grade-point averages for the women. GC seniors Mike Stoltzfus, Goshen, and Frank Hess, Goshen, also placed among the top-10 men. Hess, a pre-med major, was the only athlete honored who had accumulated a perfect 4.0 GPA. —JB

GC named "Character Building College"

Goshen College was one of 92 U.S. colleges and universities listed on the "Honor Roll of Character Building Colleges" published by the John M. Templeton Foundation and released May 17.

The Honor Roll is intended to bring to the public's attention colleges and universities that do an outstanding job in building students' characters, Fran Schapperle, Templeton Foundation executive assistant, said May 18.

The foundation hired the Marketing Research Institution, Jackson, Miss., to survey more than 1,400 accredited four-year institutions in the U.S. in the fall of 1988. The president of each college was asked to nominate from five to 12 other colleges that did a good job building students'characters; 719 colleges were cited.

To be included on the Honor Roll, a college had to be nominated by at least five other colleges. —LLK

Nine serve Merry Lea internships

Nine GC students worked at the Merry Lea Environmental Learning Center of Goshen College, Wolf Lake, Ind., as Group Dekko International, Inc., interns. They developed and conducted interpretive programs in nature study for visiting school groups.

The interns were Scott T. Bates, a sophomore biology major from Toledo, Ohio; Timothy A. Drescher, a senior elementary-education major from Harrisonburg, Va.; Kimberley S. Hawkins, a senior elementary-education major from Paola, Kan.; Rod D. Litwiller, a junior elementary-education major from Foosland, Ill.; Jennifer G. Metzler, a junior elementary-education major from Kokomo, Ind.; Diana K. Nelson, a junior biology major from Berne, Ind.; Christine R. Reinhard, a junior elementary-education major from Berne; Kimberly A. Stjernholm, a junior elementary-education major from Boulder, Colo., and Laurel B. Voran, a senior art major from Goshen.

New faculty hired for '89-90 school year

The Goshen College Board of Overseers approved wage and salary increases for the 1989-90 fiscal year, faculty promotions and the hiring of new faculty members at its June 9-10 meeting on campus.

Depending on their rank, faculty members will receive a salary increase of either five percent or 8.5 percent. Staff members will receive a 7.5 percent increase. Additonally, a fringe-benefit proposal to bring the college into compliance with Section 89 of the 1986 Tax Reform Act was approved.

Rafael Falcón, associate professor of Spanish, was promoted to full professor. David L. Mosley, assistant professor of music and humanities, was promoted to associate professor. Thomas J. Meyers, associate professor of sociology, received tenure. The board also approved plans for the 1990-91 sabbatical of Ronald L. Stutzman, professor of anthropology, who will lead the Study-Service Term unit in Costa Rica in 1989-90.

The hiring of Mary C. Linton, Lexington, Ky., for a tenure-track position as assistant professor of biology was approved. Hired for one-year positions were Roger E. Blaine, Granville, Ohio, associate librarian in the Good Library; Timothy R. Fox, Muncie, Ind., assistant professor of Spanish; Sharon Swartley, Goshen, assistant professor of physical education, and Margaret L. Williams, half-time assistant professor of business.

Faculty members who will be on sabbatical during the 1989-90 school year will be Don Blosser, associate professor of Bible who, with his wife Carolyn, will lead the China SST unit in the fall and be on sabbatical January-June 1990; John Fisher, professor of English; Fred Litwiller, director of career services; Ron Milne, associate professor of mathematics; Jonathan Roth, professor of biology; Theron Schlabach, professor of history, who will be a visiting scholar at the University of Notre Dame July-December 1989, and Loren Stauffer, director of staff personnel, who is taking his sabbatical in the summers of 1988, 1989 and 1990.

Stan North Martin will continue as interim registrar for the next school year. Stan W. Miller, associate director of admissions, will serve as interim director of admissions for the 1989-90 school year and become registrar July 1, 1990.

The board also approved the college's 1989-92 strategic plan and plans for the construction of an elevator for the Administration Building. The new elevator will make the building accessible to the handicapped.

Under the direction of Loren Swartzendruber of the Mennonite Board of Education, the board carried out its annual reorganization. Reappointed as officers were Leanne Schertz, Peoria, Ill., chair; Allon Lefever, Lancaster, Pa., assistant chair, and James Halteman, Wheaton, Ill., secretary. —LLK

Students, faculty win science fellowships, grants

Ten GC students were able to spend the summer concentrating on science because of scholarships and fellowships awarded to them by the Pew Science Program and GC's Turner Precision X-Ray Measurements Laboratory. Three GC faculty members received grants for summer research.

The Pew Science Program is an initiative of The Pew Charitable Trusts, Philadelphia, Pa. The goal of the program is to encourage undergraduates to major in science and mathematics, improve the teaching of science to non-science majors and allow faculty members at four-year colleges to conduct research. Goshen College is one of the six members of the Great Lakes cluster of institutions in the Pew Science Program.

Selected for the Pew Scholars program, a program for students who have just completed their first year of college, were Kathryn A. Baker, Orrville, Ohio; David L. Cooper, Scottdale, Pa.; Carl E. Friesen, Middlebury, Ind.; David Schipani, Elkhart, Ind., and Alicia F. Showalter, Harrisonburg, Va.

They attended a special summer program June 1-Aug. 5 at Luther College, Decorah, Iowa, where they studied basic research techniques, learned how to use scientific instruments and to design simple experiments. Each Pew Scholar received a $1,500 stipend and room and board.

Selected for the Pew Fellows program for upperclass students were Gerry S. Leatherman, a senior physics major from Coatesville, Pa., and Michael L. Zimmerman, a junior chemistry major from Ephrata, Pa. As Pew Fellows, the students helped perform research in laboratories in the cluster's six institutions. Leatherman worked in the Turner Laboratory at GC and Zimmerman worked in the laboratory of Northwestern University chemistry professor Fred Lewis, Evanston, Ill. Each Pew Fellow received room, board and a $2,500 stipend.

The Goshen College faculty members who received Pew Faculty Research Fellowships for the summer were Stanley N. Grove, associate professor of biology; Carl S. Helrich, Jr., professor of physics, and John D. Yordy, professor of chemistry.

Grove worked at Northwestern University with professor Richard Gaber of the department of biochemistry, molecular biology and cell biology. Helrich continued research at the Turner Laboratory and Yordy conducted research at GC.

Elaine C. Kaufmann, a junior computer-systems major from Tiskilwa, Ill., and Evert M. Vandeworp, a junior physics major from Louisville, Ohio, received Turner Laboratory Fellowships. A. Jeremy Kropf, a sophomore physics major from Elkhart, Ind., received the University of Notre Dame-Turner Laboratory Undergraduate Fellowship.

Mission and higher education: redefining internationalism

By Wilbert R. Shenk

The international dimension in Mennonite higher education has been crucial to the justification of Mennonite colleges from the beginning. However, the term ''international'' has undergone changes of meaning as the reality it describes has altered drastically. John S. Coffman's keynote address at the founding of Elkhart Institute in 1896 reflected the widely-held conviction that Western civilization had unlocked the secrets of progress in every realm of life: technological, political, economic, cultural and spiritual.

The emergence of Mennonite higher education in the late 19th century went hand-in-glove with missionary efforts to Asia and Africa. The Student Volunteer Movement, led by figures like John R. Mott, was at the height of its influence. Mennonites also felt the tug of the SVM slogan, ''The evangelization of the world in this generation.''

The period was marked by optimism and self-confidence in the West. The internationalism of the age was couched in the idiom of the West. In this atmosphere the founders challenged Mennonites to support institutions of higher learning in order to participate in a mission to the world.

Within two decades World War I shattered this doctrine of progress. Western civilization was in deep crisis; less than 25 years later a second world war raged. World War II shifted the military balance of power, with the United States dominant in the West and the Soviet Union master of the communist bloc.

The spirit of ''manifest destiny'' shaped the internationalism of the founders. Few challenged the assumption that the West had the answers that the rest of the world needed. The opportunity before institutions of higher education was to prepare young people to spread progress worldwide.

The Cold War redefined internationalism. Instead of bringing peace, the end of World War II brought intense ideological conflict between communism and other systems. The colonial empires of the European powers were collapsing and dozens of these colonies were on the verge of becoming independent nations. It also became apparent that another fault line divided the world between the rich and the poor, the haves and the havenots. The two power blocs competed for the loyalties of the poorer nations.

On the education scene, international education meant bringing students from abroad to study in North America. The Mennonite colleges banded together after 1945 to sponsor a program for international students, an effort that still plays an important role.

The two world wars spurred technological development. The United States emerged from World War II the undisputed industrial and economic power. The success of the Marshall Plan in rebuilding western Europe and the outstanding recoveries of the German and Japanese economies, in particular, gave a boost to morale.

The notion of international aid quickly gained ground. Many argued that the less-developed countries of Asia, Africa and Latin America likewise could be developed through infusions of capital, technology and expertise. Shortly after his inauguration, President John F. Kennedy proclaimed the '60s the Development Decade. The mission of the West was to ''help people to help themselves'' through the spread of technical knowledge.

By the early '60s Mennonite educational leaders were beginning to ask how they might offer young people a new kind of educational experience. In 1965 the Council of Mennonite Colleges (CMC) created an International Education Services (IES) program and appointed Henry D. Weaver, Jr. director. This action included formation of an advisory council to oversee both the IES and Mennonite Central Committee's new Teachers Abroad Program.

In May, 1966, a conference on international education, similar in scope and focus to that in 1989, was held. However, the vision of a CMC-sponsored international education program, closely linked to Mennonite and Brethren-in-Christ mission and service agencies, failed to gain support. The IES quietly faded away. President Paul Mininger concluded that the only course left to Goshen College was to move ahead on its own, and he called on Henry Weaver to design a program. Notably absent from the 1989 conference was any call for inter-institutional cooperation.

In the 1980s internationalism has increasingly given way to globalization. To espouse such an approach is to swim against the tide. Kennedy's Development Decade ended in the early '70s in disillusionment. The symbols and institutions of international aid have been corroded by cynicism. The United States has one of the lowest per capita budgets for international development of all the industrial powers. The '80s have been a decade of growing provincialism and self-preoccupation — at the moment in history when the Christian movement is gaining strength and maturity in the non-western world and calling for new opportunities to relate and collaborate with fellow Christians in other parts of the world.

As we have already observed, ''international'' has had different meanings over time depending on the context. The call for ''globalization'' is coming from Christians concerned that as disciples of Jesus Christ we ought to be more than reflectors of the prevailing currents. Mission and service agencies of the church will require in the years ahead a new generation of workers trained to think of themselves as citizens of ''no mean city'' and whose highest loyalty is to the kingdom of God.

To prepare people who can live as citizens of the world requires a curriculum and learning environment that moves beyond the status quo. In 1989 there can be no higher priority than to commit ourselves to turn this vision into reality.

Campus renovation

Buzzing saws, pounding hammers and the smell of fresh paint replaced the quiet, tranquil atmosphere on GC campus this summer. "This $1.5 million renovation project is one of the most ambitious projects that Goshen College has undertaken in over two decades," said Mardene Horst Kelley, business manager. The changes, which include the installation of a college-wide energy-management system and easier accessibility for disabled persons, will save the college approximately $45,000 per year. Other major changes also include safety improvements and new furniture for the residence halls. The Goshen College board of overseers and administrative cabinet received approval from the city's Economic Development Commission and city council to issue economic-development revenue bonds to finance the project. Repayment of the bond issue, purchased from Trustcorp Bank in Goshen, will be spread over 15 years.

Work crews assisting in the renovation included volunteers from two local Mennonite churches, 80 college students employed over the summer months and 24 employees from the maintenance and custodial departments at the college. Name student media heads

G. Anthony Lapp, a junior English major from Lansdale, Pa., will be the editor-in-chief of the Goshen College Record, the student newspaper, for the fall 1989 trimester. Trudy L. Good, a junior majoring in communication and psychology from Lancaster, Pa., will be Record editor-in-chief for the 1990 winter trimester.

Emily V. Headings, a senior English major from Shepherdstown, W. Va., was the Record's editor-in-chief for the 1989 spring trimester.

Joy G. Sager, a junior communication and English major from Englewood, Colo., will edit the Maple Leaf, the college's yearbook.

Christina M. Risser, a junior communication major from LeMars, Iowa, will be the 1989-90 station manager of WGCS, FM 91.1, the college's classical-music radio station. She previously had been WGCS chief announcer.

Other leaders announced

By Karen Kurtz

Nine Goshen College students will serve in leadership positions in the student government for 1989-90, announced Norman L. Kauffmann, Goshen College student dean.

Five students have been elected to the Student Central Committee (SCC). They are: Jana L. King, Clinton, Wis., a senior sociology major; Charles J. Green, Elkhart, Ind., a junior physics major; Roger E. Martin, Lakewood, Colo., a junior biology major; Steven J. Weaver, Mohnton, Pa., a sophomore collegiate-studies major, and Vishal Varma, Calcutta, India, a senior business major. Varma will chair the SCC.

SCC oversees student involvement in governing committees, organizations and clubs. In addition, SCC shapes policies and programs for the student body and serves as a liaison between students and faculty, the administration, parents and the Board of Overseers. Committee members are elected annually by the student body and may serve a maximum of two years.

Four students were elected to the Campus Activities Council (CAC). They are: Rochelle A. Martin, Downers Grove, Ill., a junior early-childhood-education major; David L. Maugel, Bryan, Ohio, a junior mathematics major; Melissa J. Woolace, Alvordton, Ohio, a senior foods-and-nutrition major, and Todd D. Martin, Dalton, Ohio, a sophomore art major.

CAC works to meet the social and recreational needs of GC students. Along with the director of student activities, Patricia Unruh Miller, the committee plans and implements student activities, including the film series, concerts, Fall Festival, dances, Carnival, coffeehouses and late-night mixers.

Three Goshen College students will assist Campus Ministries in 1989-90, Martha Smith Good, campus minister said.

Jana L. King, Clinton, Wis., a senior sociology major, will be administrative assistant to Smith Good. King also will coordinate the schedule for the Staley Lecturer, a visiting Christian-scholar lectureship, assist the director of Community Volunteer Service, a network that arranges local service opportunities for students and be recording secretary for the Chapel Committee.

Barbara L. Yoder, Bristol, Ind., a senior social-work major, and Susan L. Conrad, Perkasie, Pa., a sophomore Bible-and-religion major, will be Campus Ministries' student assistants.

Yoder will help Smith Good plan and organize small groups. She also will coordinate programs with other religious-life groups on campus.

Conrad will work as the student director of the Community Volunteer Service program, arranging off-campus community service opportunities. For example, she will work with about 100 student volunteers in the Big Brother/Big Sister program and the Adopt-A-Grandparent program.

GC receives grant

The United States Department of Energy has awarded an $18,280 grant to Goshen College for the purchase of an energy-management system. The grant was given under the department's "Institutional Conservation Program," authorized under Title III of the National Energy Conservation Policy Act.

GC business manager Mardene Kelley will use the money to buy a stand-alone computer that will adjust heating and air conditioning on campus automatically. The college will match the department's grant. The total cost of the energy-management system will be $36,563. Kelley hopes to buy the system by Dec. 31.

Alumna's quilts exhibited

"Amish Quilts of Northern Indiana, 1880-1945," an exhibit of 25 quilts from the collection of Rebecca Haarer '75, opened Sept. 3 at the Midwest Museum of American Art, Elkhart, Ind. It will run through Oct. 8. Sponsoring the exhibit are the Mennonite-Amish Museum Committee of GC, the Midwest Museum of American Art and the Indiana Arts Commission.

Another exhibit, "Costume and Genre: Scenes from 19th Century European Mennonite Life," will run Sept. 2-24 in the Goshen College Art Gallery. Sponsored by the GC art department, the Mennonite Historical Library and the Mennonite-Amish Museum Committee, the exhibit includes 23 prints from the Paul and Jean Kraybill Collection.

Annual Report 1988-89

Celebrating the past — planning the future

The past year at Goshen College was characterized by a year-long celebration marking the 20th anniversary of our international-education requirement. It was also a year in which we did major planning for future programs and facilities.

We are grateful to our alumni and many other donors for record support and a record number of supporters. The college received more than $4.059 million in contributions from 8,500 gifts, a 10.8 percent increase over the previous fiscal year. The alumni share of all giving was $1.857 million. Congratulations to a college relations department and business manager whose efforts combined to give us our 50th year of balanced budgets.

Happily, a growing enrollment matched our increasing contributed support. Thanks to our admissions department and all who contribute to our fine program, we anticipate that this fall will mark the fourth consecutive year of growth in the student body.

Our international-education celebration was shared with hundreds of off-campus guests at the beginning and end of the school year. Alumni who came to campus for the fall banquet joined in giving special recognition to the pioneers who dreamed and dared to begin this program. We recognized presidents emerita Paul Mininger and J. Lawrence Burkholder, dean emeritus Carl Kreider, Henry Weaver Jr., Arlin Hunsberger and the Board of Overseers of 1968.

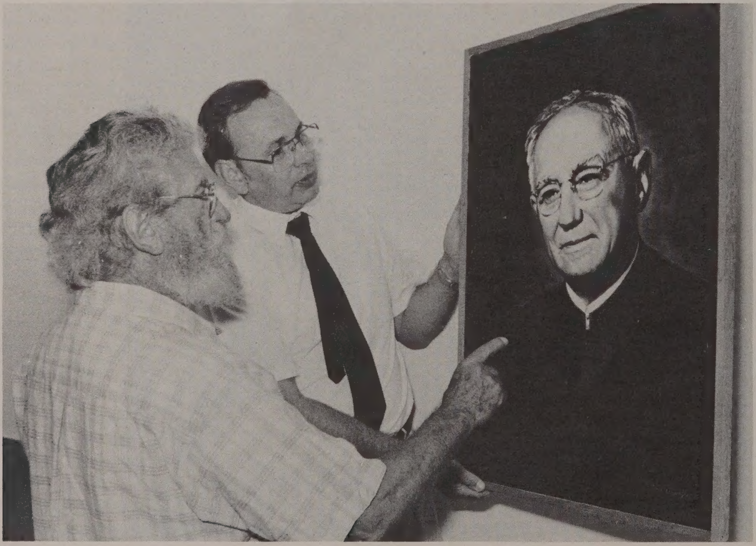
Other memorable events were the fine addresses by Foreign Minister Rodrigo Madrigal of Costa Rica and The Rev. Theodore Hesburgh, C.S.C., president emeritus of the University of Notre Dame, and an all-school study day led by eight citizens of the countries in which we have studied. Many enriching, intercultural events with crafts, foods, music and art continued throughout the year.

Two spring conferences concluded our celebration. The Wingspread Conference at Racine, Wis., gave us a setting to tell our story to national leaders in international education and to learn from programs at Stanford, Michigan State, Notre Dame, the University of California, DePauw, Wheaton and others. The 50 conferees cited an eloquent address on service by president emeritus Burkholder and the keynote address on the developing world by Dr. Alex Kwapong of Ghana as "most helpful."

The Conference on Education for International Mission and Service in May, reported in our July Bulletin, was a creative partnership among 13 Mennonite colleges and seminaries and 16 inter-Mennonite mission and service agencies. Getting to know each other and forming a common vision for education and mission was one of the most important results.

This past year was also a time of self-study, goal-setting and planning. The Common Experience Committee, chaired by Ronald Milne, associate professor of mathematics, made major progress toward the goal of reflecting our 10 learning outcomes in the general-education curriculum that is required for all students.

An effort to state academic outcomes or goals clearly is now widespread in American higher education. The



A new portrait of Sanford C. Yoder, Goshen College president 1923-40, will hang in the office of President Victor Stoltzfus. The college commissioned the portrait from artist O. W. "Tom" Schenk, who attended GC in 1933-34. Now a resident of Southwest Harbor, Maine., Schenk knew S. C. Yoder during the artist's days as a GC student. As a gift to the college, Schenk reduced his usual commission price substantially and delivered the portrait personally in July. He is shown with Victor Stoltzfus. In the early 1970s, Schenk painted portraits of Conrad Grebel, George Blaurock and Feliz Mantz, founders of the Anabaptist movement. His S. C. Yoder portrait will join a portrait of Noah Byers in the president's office. - Photo by John D. Yoder unique aspect of Goshen's planning in this area is its attempt to reflect our goals in the total campus experience. Our learning outcomes now influence planning for our programs in the residence halls, chapels, public lectures, student advising and classroom teaching.

The collegiate-studies faculty, led by Shirley Showalter, associate professor of English, researched the best ideas on student advising from several innovative campuses. Aided by ideas from many faculty, they produced an advising manual that will help students and their advisers track the students total educational experience from first-year courses to senior resumes.

A new schedule for chapels and convocations makes it possible to meet for longer periods of time three times a week rather than five. The new schedule also provides for several occasions when all students and faculty have time to socialize.

In March, the Board approved a Campus Master Plan developed by LeRoy Troyer and Associates and donated by LeRoy and Phyllis Troyer. It provides an assessment of the structural integrity, safety, appearance, and access for the handicapped of our 17 major buildings. The Master Plan anticipates spaces for future buildings, outdoor athletic facilities and a better campus entrance. It helps us establish priorities as we upgrade our current facilities and plan new buildings. Our dreams include better rehearsal and performance space for musical events and larger dining facilities.

Our business manager, Mardene Horst Kelley, led the planning for a $1.5 renovation program for campus residence halls and other areas. Before the renovation, an engineering study of campus energy estimated we could save as much as $45,000 annually by increasing building insulation and installing new windows and a new computerized energy management system.

Norm Kauffmann, dean of student development, and others in the Student Development Division led in planning for a campus "night spot." This renovation of the Leafraker basement space will give students another site for informal gatherings. Its dedication will be a tribute to Jon Nussbaum and Todd Neuenschwander, two students killed in April, 1989 by a drunken driver. The "night spot" will open in January, 1990.

GC and the College Mennonite Church formed Amity Corporation, a partnership, to pursue common goals in mission and shared facilities. Students doubled their attendance at old and new church programs this past year. The congregation has offered to help finance a major part of the Union Building renovation for its own and the college's use, if Goshen College can build a new recreation/fitness building in the next three to five years. College Church and college committees are devising a renovation plan that will serve us both.

Planning continues for an 18,000-square-foot Science Annex. Recent gifts and pledges give us confidence that the remaining funds can be raised for a spring, 1990 groundbreaking. We have preliminary architectural drawings for the Recreation/Fitness building in hand and continue to plan cooperative programming with the Greencroft Retirement Center for that building.

Ron Gunden, director of college relations, and his team continued work in 1988-89 on our capital campaign, Uncommon Cause — Century II. Among the major challenges for the Century-II campaign are raising funds to build the recreation/fitness building, to endow the international-education program and to complete the Science Annex funding. The college-relations team contacted many individuals who might wish to help lay the foundation for Century II's success by giving large, "leadership" gifts. They are also organizing the more public and visible phase of the campaign.

This year was also one of transition in the college's administrative cabinet. Alice Roth, executive vice president, accepted the position of vice president for overseas ministries at the Mennonite Board of Missions in Elkhart, Ind. Her five years of administrative leadership are deeply appreciated. John Nyce served most ably this past year as interim dean and begins this year as associate dean. John W. Eby, sociologist and former chair of the business department at EMC, is the new dean of the college. Richard Gerig, former admissions director, is now director of enrollment and marketing.

A profile of the student body shows that we had 1,085 students or a full-time equivalent of 1,036. Of that number there were 30 Blacks, 26 Hispanics and 59 international students from 23 countries. Students came from 34 states and five Canadian provinces. Mennonites and closely related groups were 72 percent with 25 other denominations represented. Our five largest majors now are business, elementary education, nursing, collegiate studies (a special program for those deciding on a major) and biology.

The 1988-89 school year drew strength from our past and focused our vision for the future. As our Board of Overseers and many campus groups planned for better things ahead, we were doing what is distinctly human.

Merry Lea Environmental Learning Center

Eugene H. Peterson writes, ". . . we are unfinished creatures, ravenously purpose hungry, alive with possibilities." More than many others educators understand just how "purpose hungry" we humans are, and what a responsibility God has laid on those who hope to educate the purpose-hungry.

It is a privilege to lead a college where the behavior of the faculty and staff shows students that "Culture for Service" is not just a possibility but a reality within everyone's reach.

It is humbling to see how many of our students take up the torch and serve others while still at Goshen. Mike Stoltzfus and Jon Peachey, two 1989 graduates, began a run across North America to benefit the homeless only a few days after commencement. Reading our alumni notes in each issue of the Bulletin shows the "Culture for Service" ethic pervades the life of our alumni, too.

Those alumni have provided me with many vivid memories this year, including alumni meetings in such varied settings as the beautiful hills of Holmes County, Ohio, in colorful Chinatown of lower Manhattan and in Thomashof near Karlsruhe, Germany. Our alumni's warmth and your continuing support inspire me and my colleagues as we look forward to the 1989-90 school year.

Report of the director of College Relations

Loyal support makes two milestones possible

By Ron Gunden

Each of us enjoys the opportunity to celebrate. Birthdays, religious ceremonies, commencement, anniversaries and memorial services are important events. We mark the occasion by inviting our family and close friends to join us for a time of reflection on our history, recognizing the people who are a part of our story and the events that influenced our lives.

This year much of our work in College Relations centered around celebrating the 20th anniversary of Goshen's SST program. Many of our friends and alumni in campus events and at other locations in the U.S. and internationally, met to discuss the value of international education and celebrate its importance in our lives and the history of the college.

We celebrated a second milestone when we closed the fiscal year, for the 50th consecutive year, with a balanced budget. Since 1939 the Board of Overseers and faculty, administrators, staff and donors have worked together assuring adequate income, making generous contributions and controlling expenses to make it happen. This long record of fiscal stability is uncommon in higher education and is an achievement in which we take some pride.

We enjoy celebrating our success stories at Goshen College! We are pleased to list our many donors and in that way recognize their important role in the Goshen College team. Thank you for your faithful and generous support.

Listed below are several highlights of the 1988-89 school year.

Highlights

Unrestricted contributions of $1.75 million including $780,000 from alumni and $88,000 from friends*

- Estate gifts totaling $397,000

- $1.25 million was contributed for endowment* including:
  $250,000 for the Harold and Wilma Good Library Endowment
  $600,000 for the Lee A. Rieth Chair in Environmental Studies at Merry Lea

- Alumni contributed $1.857 million for all purposes

- Goshen College Associates (annual contributors of $1,000 or more) gave $2.104 million

- Two additional departmental chairs received full funding this year — The Carl Kreider Chair in Economics and The Brembeck Chair in Moral Philosophy

Contributions report

This annual report recognizes all donors — alumni, friends, parents, churches, businesses and industries — who generously have invested their financial support in Goshen College from July 1, 1988 through June 30, 1989.

We have made every attempt to be accurate and apologize for any omissions or errors that may exist. If you see inaccuracies, please contact the college relations office at (219) 535-7564 so that we can make the necessary corrections.

Deferred giving report

Participation in various types of planned gifts to Goshen College continues to grow. These GC alumni and friends funded gift annuities, deferred-payment gift annuities, life-insurance programs, charitable trusts and revocable plans during the past fiscal year.

Matching-gift corporations double your Goshen-College dollar

Last year 94 corporations — listed below — gave $116,914 to match their employees' gifts to Goshen College. More than 1,000 corporations in the United Stated participate in the matching-gift program. Some companies double or even triple the employee gift when proper forms are completed and sent to Goshen College with the gift.

To find out if your employer will match your gift to GC, contact your corporate personnel office or the College Relations Office.

Church giving remains strong

Church support to Goshen College grows, providing strength and stability to the college program, while other church-related colleges in North America find support dwindling. The on-going support of Mennonite congregations and conferences is of vital importance as the college carries out its mission.

In 1988-89 the Mennonite congregations and conferences listed below gave a total of $530,100.

Culture for Service award winners

At the Alumni Banquet on Saturday, Oct. 7, the Alumni Board will present the newly established Culture for Service Awards to five alumni. They are Albert '47 and Lois Litwiller Buckwalter '44, Melvin Loewen '49, Dorothy Snapp McCammon '44 and Art Weaver '47.

The awards were created to recognize alumni whose lives and work are models of the Goshen College motto — Culture for Service. The Association believes that these people have lived out the motto.

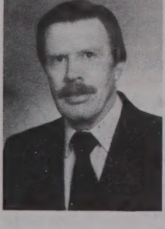
Albert and Lois Buckwalter have spent almost their entire adult lives among several Argentine Indian groups. After graduation from Goshen College they embarked on their own journey as missionaries to Argentina, arriving there in 1950. Several years later, they helped Toba Indian Christians form their own church — United Evangelical Church. Later, Mocovi, Pilaga and Wichi groups joined and today more than 4,000 members are part of 100 congregations.

In the early years, they had a fairly traditional approach to mission work, but living among the Indians, they discovered they were learning from them as well. They began intensive efforts to learn the language of the people, rather than speaking only Spanish.

They eventually learned a number of local languages and have translated portions of the Bible into the Toba, Mocovi and Pilaga languages. They say that their translation efforts have helped them to understand the Scriptures better.

The Buckwalters are the parents of four children, all of whom graduated from GC.

Although they are officially retired, the Buckwalters still have work to do. They will return to Argentina in October for a special one-year assignment to complete editing work on the Pilaga New Testament and portions of the Mocovi Old Testament.



Melvin J. Loewen came to Goshen College in 1946 from Steinbach, Manitoba. He received the B.A. in natural science in 1949. His other degrees include the B.S. in secondary education from Mankato (Minn.) State College and the M.A. from the University of Minnesota in 1952.

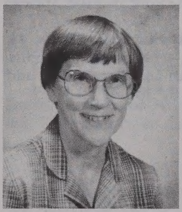
He attended Hartford (Conn.) Seminary, received a license in public administration from the University of Brussels in 1960 and the Ph.D. from that institution in 1961. His doctoral degree was in political science with specialization in African studies.

After his Hartford studies, he and his wife Elfrieda joined the Congo Inland Mission (now Africa Inter-Mennonite Mission) in Kasai Province of what is now know as Zaire. Later he taught in the pre-university tutoring center, the Congo Polytechnic Institute, Leopoldville. From 1964 to 1967 he served as academic dean and then as president of the Protestant University in Stanleyville.

From 1967 to 1970 the Loewen family lived in the U.S. Mel was dean of academic affairs at Pacific College, Fresno, Calif., initiating a new emphasis on international studies. In 1970, the World Bank asked him to become educational representative for West Africa, working out of Ivory Coast. Since 1973, Mel has had various assignments for the World Bank dealing with Latin America and Asia.

Since 1986 the Loewens have lived in Kigali, Rwanda as World Bank representatives in that country.

Mel and Elfrieda have six children, four of whom attended GC.



A year after graduating from Goshen College in 1944, Dorothy Snapp married Don McCammon. After Don's graduation they studied linguistics under the Wycliffe Bible Translators in Norman, Okla., and Chinese at Cornell University.

From 1947 to 1951 they were missionaries in China. Along with three other GC grads, they experienced the last two years of the nationalist government and the first two years of the communist "liberation."

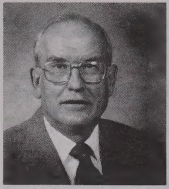
Although they tried to stay in China, they eventually realized that they were a threat to their friends. Don was arrested in late 1950 and deported in early 1951. Their first child, Julia '73, was born that summer while Dorothy was still in China. She wrote a book, We Tried to Stay, based on their experiences in China.

From 1952 to 1958 they lived in Tokyo. Their home served as a business base for the Mennonite mission in Hokkaido and as a student center for the Hokkaido Mennonites who came to Tokyo for college. Upon returning to Goshen, Dorothy was executive secretary of WMSA for seven years and taught high-school English for 18 years.

In 1981 she was part of a group of women who began to have a Sunday worship service with the female inmates at the Elkhart County jail. When Dorothy realized that few of the women had finished high school, she offered to help them in their studies. Soon it was clear that others, too, wished for an opportunity to come out of the ward and sit in quiet with a compassionate friend.

She quit her teaching job and began to go to the jail each day. She goes to court when they do, and visits them if they go on to prison and upon their return home.

Dorothy continues her daily visits to the county jail where she is lovingly known as one of the "Jail-House Grandmas."



Art Weaver started at GC in 1941, but did not finish until 1947 because of three years in Civilian Public Service. After college he took a job as a clerk at American Home Foods, a division of American Home Products, Elkhart, Ind.

Soon after he arrived, Whitehall Laboratories, another affiliate of American Home Products, took over the Elkhart plant, and Art began a long career with Whitehall, the company that made Anacin. He moved from cost accountant to office manager to packaging manager and assistant plant manager. From 1959 to 1965 he was plant manager and assistant vice president.

During those years in Elkhart he served on the boards of the YMCA, the Mental Health Association and the United HealthFoundation. He also chaired the congregation at Eighth Street Mennonite Church, Goshen, and served on the advisory board of the First National Bank, Elkhart.

In 1966 Art, his wife Joan Yoder '45 and their three sons moved to New York City where he became vice president of operations for Whitehall with responsibilities for manufacturing, inventory control, distribution and management information systems. Over the course of 23 years in the New York office he took over quality control, research and development, finance, the medical department, medical sales and regulatory affairs. In 1984 he became executive vice president of operations, retiring in February 1989 to Scottsdale, Ariz.

During his 40 years with Whitehall Laboratories, its sales grew 40 fold to became the largest non-prescription drug company in the country. Two of its best-know products are Dristan and Advil, both of which Art was involved in producing. He also served on the government-industry committee that set present-day standards for child-safe packaging.

The Alumni Association Board of Directors has named three people for election to the Board. They will take the places vacated by outgoing members Ralph Lugbill '53, Phil Rittgers '57 and Brenda Short Shelby '66.

Ada Mast Hallman '63 of Lancaster, Pa., has been selected to serve a two-year term as president-elect and will become president in 1991. She is administrator of Willow Valley Manor, a retirement community of 500 residents. She is a member of Community Mennonite Church of Lancaster and is active in local school and community organizations.

James H. Clymer '62 is administrative director of the University of Colorado Student Health Service Psychiatry Department. He received the M.S.W. in 1964 and has been associated with the University since that time as social worker, professor and administrator. He and Charlene Alderfer '60 are the parents of Nicole '89 and another daughter.

R. Michael Massanari '63 of Coralville, Iowa, has been involved in teaching, research and consultation at the University of Iowa Medical School since 1974. He and Lois Shetler '63 are parents of GC students, Eric and Analisa.

The Alumni Board recommends these three. Following action by the Alumni Association at the Oct. 8 annual meeting, their terms will begin.

College Bulletin

Congregational leadership in crisis

At issue

About this issue

Beginning with this issue of the Goshen College Bulletin, we've made several changes that we hope will make it more interesting and informative.

The major change is increasing the length from 16 to 32 pages. The extra space gives us the opportunity to:

- add a feature story on an alumnus
- use more photographs
- add photo credits and bylines for articles
- give more information on upcoming campus events
- alert alumni to special events like tours
- indicate faculty openings
- include letters to the editor
- include more "extended notes" about alumni

The second major change is that we are moving from a bi-monthly to a quarterly publishing schedule. From now on the Bulletin will appear in December, March, June and Sept;ember. We hope you like the new format and frequency.

A word about our themes. In each issue we highlight a theme that we hope will interest the majority of our readers. The themes rotate among issues related to Goshen College, the Mennonite Church and society in general. Suggestions for future topics are always welcome.

Even when the theme is closely related to the Mennonite Church, as is the discussion of congregational leadership in this issue, we hope that we treat the issue broadly enough to interest our friends in other traditions.

—JDY

Letter to the editor:

I had the honor to spend some months in Goshen College in the spring 1982, lecturing in the company of my closest friend, Hania Zbierzchowska. She worked at the time at the Agricultural University in Warsaw (Poland) which had an exchange with Goshen College and was invited by the English department for a one-year stay. Our "tutor" was Professor John Fisher. It was an extremely important time for both of us.

I have to inform you that Hania died last March because of cancer. She suffered a lot and some days before her death in the hospital she answered to a Catholic priest, offering her a religious consolation, that she considers herself a Mennonite. The dignity and openness of your church impressed deeply both of us and had a very strong influence on her moral attitude; she was brave and quiet.

Just a few weeks before her death, she sent a small collection of her poems to a competition organised by the "World of Poetry" in California. Two weeks after her death I received a letter from them informing that she got an Award of Merit there. Could you kindly publish some of Hania's poems in her memory?

Poems by Hanna Olcha Zbierzchowska

In the Hospital /I/

I was awaked by some clamorous birds
their wings like hands lifted to the sky someone was lying still watching the passing shadows someone was praying loud to all his gods someone was standing in the row of laughing ghosts someone was not not dying because the death had been taken away from him someone was promising that the sun would not be stolen from me everything suddenly the road uncertain endless
I was awaked by some clamorous birds
and entered that real unreality

In the Hospital /II/

I look at that person in the mirror mutilated deformed contored face twisted with pain strange image I do not recall they tell me to call it myself my self
I do not agree for
I do not accept
I shun the sight of myself

onto a sheet of paper torn out of an old exercise-book the words are flowing the acridity of catharsis

L'avenir dure longtemps
Charles de Gaulle

I shut my eyes and I can see you lecturing at that far away strange unreal place
Goshen Indiana
speaking about the future which lasts so long
The world we always thought to be so cruel abominable
hideously villainous and sick
The world we used to hate so much when we were very young
The very world has gathered now colours of rainbow miraculously subtle charm
Now that it's shrinking so rapidly now that it's fading away who does the future last long for not for me
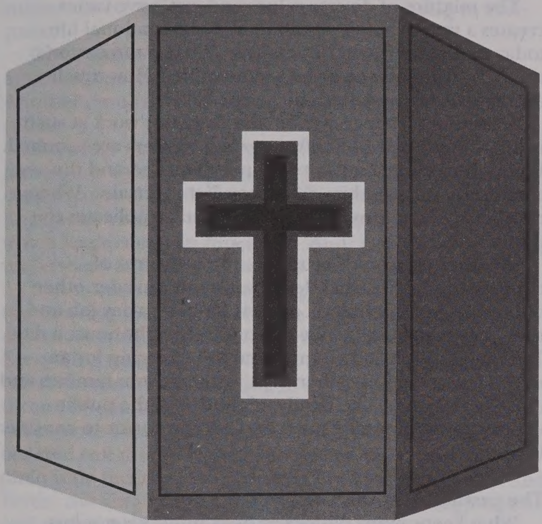
not for us

(This poem is connected with a lecture given by Hanna's friend, Waclaw Sadkowski, at Goshen College in May 1982.)

Slipping away: why pastors leave the pastorate



By Willis Breckbill

There's a quiet crisis in the Mennonite Church, a crisis marked by the sounds of silence, the sights of empty pulpits. More pastors are choosing to leave the congregations they serve for others or to leave the pastorate altogether.

Because of the church's structure and the unusual longevity of most pastoral tenures in its history, there are no shocking statistics to jolt us into awareness or to help us grasp the situation. However, almost every church leader now can recount a painful anecdote about a congregation facing the crisis of a pastor's leaving, voluntarily or involuntarily.

Of course, when a congregation loses a pastor through termination or resignation, the situation may not be a quiet one. The actual resignation or termination may be preceded by painful and noisy acrimony, by conflict and hard feelings. Even such a break results in an empty, silent pulpit, however.

Sometimes resignations come as a surprise to the congregation: the pastor has been thinking for a long time about taking another job or entering another field or just leaving that congregation. In such a case, the separation strikes the congregation as suddenly as a natural disaster, like a landslide or an earthquake.

The harried pastor and spouse

What has brought on this crisis in leadership? Let's look at the life of an imaginary — but all too real — Mennonite pastor and his family.

John is a 35-year-old pastor of a 210-member congregation. He arrives home at the end of the day having visited the sick and elderly and preparing his sermon in the office. His wife, Mary, is putting dinner in the microwave.

On the way home from her job as a director of a shelter for abused women, Mary picked up Tim, age four, from nursery school. Amy, age seven, walked home from her nearby elementary school.

John gulps down his dinner so that he can get back to the church for a premarital counseling session with a couple. The young woman is a member of his congregation; the young man she is engaged to comes from a Catholic family and her parents are not giving their full consent to the marriage. Later, he will meet with the church council to hear a recommendation from the missions commission to start a new ministry to low-income persons in the community. Some in the congregation fear this new ministry will change the congregation's style of worship and its other programs.

Meanwhile, Mary is cleaning the house at high speed. She's trying to catch up while John's at church this evening because she has only two evenings at home this week. As she cleans, she feels a little anxious because she knows some members of the congregation think she slights her duties as the pastor's wife. On the other hand, their financial situation also makes her anxious. The family needs both their incomes now; they've just paid off their educational loans and now have a mortgage. Mary knows some people in the congregation think John's salary is too high already; it's a lot more than the previous pastor received.

Under the pressures of family life, finances and congregational expectations, John's and Mary's commitment to his pastorate erodes a little bit daily.

Congregational expectations

A major point of tension in the pastorate concerns congregational expectations. While John may agree completely with the congregational and denominational theology, congregational expectations about his and his family's behavior may be the most nebulous and devastating to his pastoral commitment. In any congregation, there are as many ideas of what a good pastor is as there are members in the congregation.

Some of the areas about which individuals members have expectations are:

- Preaching: Is it biblical, practical, inspiring, intellectually stimulating?
- Teaching: Is it interesting, relevant, attracting?
- Visitation: Are calls made in the home, does hospital visiting meet needs, are the elderly visited, does the pastor have good interpersonal skills?
- Community involvement: Is there too much or not enough with the right or wrong concerns?
- Pastor's family: Does the spouse look, act and get involved acceptably and do the children measure up?

Diverse congregational theology and interests

Some pastoral ruptures, however, are earthquakes rather than landslides. Pressures build up over a certain issue — theological, social or something else — and one day the fault line slips, causing a resignation or a termination.

On a Sunday morning, when the pastor stands before the congregation to preach a sermon, he or she looks into the faces of people who embody very diverse values. Some hold to past traditions of congregational life and order. Some want freer expression in worship; others want to sing hymns and still others want drama. Some members want the congregation to hold to and teach a propositional faith with absolute answers.

Others may want to be true to Anabaptist faith and to encourage new and fresh expressions of Anabaptist convictions. Some are deeply loyal to the United States while others criticize the government's policies at home and abroad. Some embrace a broad world view while others are much more parochial. Some enjoy and promote wealth and affluence while others call for simplicity in lifestyle.

Add to this diversity a layer of issues in which the pastor can easily get caught. These pressing social issues call for study and discernment. Faithful, intelligent Christians can differ profoundly over these issues.

Such issues include divorce and remarriage, AIDS education, relating to people with AIDS, how to understand homosexuality and to involve persons with homosexual orientations in the congregation's life, abortion, how to work at questions of the inspiration and interpretation of the Bible and how to support people who have differing views on paying "war taxes."

Pastors want to be prophetic on such issues while at the same time caring for the congregation's members, no matter what their viewpoints on such controversies may be. Such a position is not an easy one.

What is the pastor's role?

The mixture of diverse values and explosive issues creates a very dynamic situation in congregational life today and raises further questions. What is the pastor's role? To whom is she or he accountable? How much authority does or should the pastor have?

Sometimes a congregation and its pastor work at such issues intentionally, but often certain answers are assumed. When the assumed answers are not discussed and the assumptions themselves differ, conflict is certain. When conflict arises, it most likely includes and implicates the pastor.

Whether erosion or eruption, the pressures of congregational life often lead pastors to consider other options. They might look at their 24-hour-a-day job and think what it would be like to work only eight hours a day. They might look at the emotional toll of caring for an entire congregation rather than just their own families and consider leaving. The family might tire of the public exposure, scrutiny and stress and ask the pastor to consider leaving.

The pastorate is a place to grow

What keeps many pastors in their pulpits is not just inertia, but the active, conscious choice of the pastorate. Many pastors find their call fulfilling. I have served three congregations in 35 years and would do so again; for me, the pastorate is a challenging place to be. My experiences as a pastor have helped me grow spiritually and stimulated me intellectually. The pastorate provides a wide variety of involvements with members of the congregation, the community and neighboring cogregations. The tasks — preaching, teaching, counseling, planning and developing programs for ministry — offer great variety. Above all it is a unique place for caring for God's highest creation — human beings.

The challenge

The challenge facing congregations today is to insure that the forces of congregational life are constructive forces, forces that uncover the beauty and strength God has given each individual, whether a member, a pastor, a pastor's spouse or a pastor's child.

A relational view of ministry

By James H. Waltner

Strong leadership in the local congregation is a major need in the church today. But that leadership is in short supply as more and more ministers leave the pastorate and numerous congregations have problems relating to their pastor.

One approach to the leadership issue focuses on attracting more qualified persons to the pastorate. Another emphasizes better training of those who feel called.

Yet, while we examine recruiting and training of the pastor, it is equally important to look at the factors in congregational life that make pastoral leadership difficult. Key questions seem to be, how do we create a climate in which leadership can function? And, how do we understand and utilize authority in the church?

Two stories illustrate opposing views of leadership and the exercise of authority. In one of Dr. Seuss' delightful children's stories, Yertle the Turtle was king of the pond. Everything went well until Yertle decided the kingdom he ruled was too small. Wanting to see more, he raised his throne by climbing on the backs of other turtles. Turtles were stacked on turtles, higher and higher, as Yertle ordered still more. Higher the throne went, until "that plain little turtle whose name was just Mack," burped! And Yertle, the king of all Sala-ma-Sond, fell off his high throne and ended as "King of the Mud."

The other story comes from the Gospels. In Luke, Jesus says, "The leader must be like the servant . . . I am among you as one who serves" (Luke 22:26-27). Jesus illustrated that at the last supper with the disciples. Rising from the table, he laid aside his garment and wrapped a towel around his waist. Pouring water into a basin, he knelt before one of the disciples. Gently washing the feet of the disciple, he then dried his feet with the towel and moved on to the next in the circle, suggesting that each member of the community should do as he did and wash each other's feet (John 13:1-17).

Walter Brueggemann, writing about the church in Living Toward a Vision, points to this image of the towel and the basin. "The whole people bent toward shalom is the entire community committed to sharing power with the powerless ones" (p. 134). He calls the towel and the basin, not "masterly tools," but "servant tools" because they make contact with those dimensions of our humanity that need personal caring attention. So "the towel is not only a statement about mission and ministry, it is a statement about identity. It calls the church to get into the same posture as the Crucified One who knows that death for obedience is a source of power" (p. 137).

These stories illustrate two world-views regarding power. Yertle the Turtle illustrates unilateral power; the towel and the basin story, relational power.

D. Bruce Roberts, in an insightful article on power and servanthood in the journal, Encounter (Winter, 1987) describes unilateral power as "the capacity to influence, guide, adjust, manipulate, shape, control, or transform the human or natural environment in order to advance one's own purposes" (p.85). Using this kind of power the influencers or leaders make a minimal attempt to establish relationships with the ones they influence or lead. The primary purpose of unilateral power is to exert a shaping and determining influence on others, while permitting the interchange to influence you very little.

This view of leadership understands power as a limited commodity: when one person has more, someone else must have less. Because power divided is power diminished, persons who operate in this mode avoid community and pursue individual independence. Exercising this kind of power leads to insensitivity to others and does not take them and their gifts seriously as contributing to a creative whole.

In contrast to unilateral power, relational power represents an alternative way of understanding human interaction. Relational power has the capacity to sustain a relationship, to influence and to be influenced, to give and to receive.

In order to be open to others in relationship a person must possess a strong self-identity. When persons are open and able to influence each other, the relationship creates power. That power is not limited but continually and infinitely produced.

Relational power will disappear if the persons involved break the relationship or if they misuse the power. The aim of relational power is not to control the other by trying to guide and control the relationship. The aim is to provide those conditions of giving and receiving influence so that there is freedom for all members to both give and receive.

This understanding of relational power can help us as we think of congregational leadership. It permits us to take the Biblical understanding of relational power and to use the skills of leadership to build up, enhance and multiply ministry.

Assertive ministerial leaders are learners, but they also will attempt to see the big picture and articulate a vision. They draw that vision from the congregation, after having fostered a high level of participation from others in the congregation. And then the congregation can give attention to empowering others to participate fully in the mission of the church.

The amount of power available to us is not limited; instead, we multiply it when we share it. We empower people when we treat them with respect and take them seriously, as they see that they have influence in shaping the vision and the mission of the congregation.

So a congregation empowers its minister leader(s), and so a minister empowers a congregation. In that context of a relational ministry, good things can sprout, and grow and bear fruit.

Women in ministry:

Redefining power and authority

By Martha Smith Good

What is the future for women in leadership in the Mennonite Church?

Three years ago, while gathering data about women in ministry, I learned how the issues of power and authority are impacting their ability to be effective leaders.

These women experienced power and authority in a dominating, controlling manner, which led them to feel powerless and voiceless. One woman in a leadership position lost her job to a young man through the action of an all-male church board. In another church the board told a woman to "stand by" for a possible leadership position. They said it would be available to her if the first choice, a male, did not accept the invitation.

Another church board did not invite a woman for a formal job interview because "they had all the information they needed from her resumé." Other incidents included sexual harassment and withholding information regarding a job description, that is, she was the last to know what she was responsible for.

Women's voicelessness is epitomized in the story of the woman who made a suggestion to a church board. The board ignored her idea, but when a male board member later made the same suggestion, it passed without further discussion.

Historically, the Mennonite Church has honored the patriarchal system of authority. This model assumes that power and authority reside in the male gender, and, furthermore declares that God has ordained this order.

However, I believe any model of church or society that places one segment in an elevated position, giving that segment the power and authority to control others, is destructive and a violation of Scripture.

The weaknesses in this paradigm of power are that

- it seeks to control, guide, influence and shape the environment in order to advance its own purpose;
- it is non-mutual in its relationships;
- it does violence to the human spirit;
- and as the ability to affect the behavior of another through force, it is competitive and destructive.

If the church is going to recognize women as ministers and allow them to function in positions of leadership, then we must look at a new paradigm of power. We must shift from the idea of power and authority as an endorsement to control, to power and authority as an opportunity to empower.

The new paradigm, which is essential if we are to attract young women to ministry, views power as restorative. Restorative power involves both a giving and a receiving. It takes the other person's concerns and needs seriously and has the capacity to sustain mutual relationships. Restorative power empowers the human spirit and seeks for mutuality in relationships.

Power as empowerment is consistent with the model of Jesus in the Gospels. Jesus did not choose his friends from among those who held power; rather, his friends included the powerless. Jesus worked to restore relationships with God and with others. Power, as empowerment from within, is a reversal and seeks expression in the community of faith.

This new paradigm provides us with a unique opportunity to enrich our life together. It affords us the opportunity to hear women's voices articulate their understanding of empowerment as a shift from power and authority as control, to power and authority as an occasion to celebrate a new model of partnership and connectedness. It capitalizes on the fact that women perceive the world differently, have had different experiences and have a differing theological perspective.

If women are to continue to minister in the life of the Mennonite Church, there must be a paradigmatic shift in our understanding and use of power and authority. Letty Russell in Household of Freedom suggests this movement is a shift of images. It moves from a hierarchial pyramid of authority as domination to a wide variety of colors that intensify as more of the rainbow becomes visible (p. 35). Let us strive to claim the rainbow image and thus clear the way for women in church leadership.

The Kingdom is everybody's business

By Charlotte Holsopple Glick

A pastor has unexpectedly resigned from the congregation. Some members sigh with relief. Others are confused, angry or sad. Congregational leadership feels betrayed, since they were unaware that the resignation was imminent. Some criticize the seminary for not enforcing their "readiness-for-ministry" requirements. Others attack the conference minister for taking sides and not being helpful with the congregation's struggle. The pastor blames the congregation, conference and seminary.

The results of this all-too-common scenario are that another pastor feels defeated, another congregation is in mourning and in pain, and yet another conference minister's hands are tied. The whole bruising process reinforces what seems to be increasing mistrust among pastors, congregations, conferences, seminaries and church-wide boards. An outsider might observe that each of the parties seems hesitant to accept their share of the responsibility.

In recent years, the need for training and developing more pastoral leaders has become an issue of intense conversation and concern in the Mennonite Church. The call of Vision 95 for adding more congregations and believers to our denomination has highlighted and focused this dilemma. Even though church-wide boards have been discussing this challenge and conferences have been hearing the calls for assistance, nowhere is this dilemma more keenly experienced than when a particular congregation in a particular setting calls a particular pastor.

Congregations begin a pastoral search for a variety of reasons. Sometimes, their pastor has decided to pastor elsewhere, change vocations or retire. Sometimes the pastor dies. Too often the pastor was involuntarily terminated. Whatever the situation, an awareness, acknowledgement and acceptance of the congregational stage in the process is of primary important at the beginning of the search.

A change in pastoral leadership is also an opportunity for a congregation to take a comprehensive look at itself and ask: What are our congregational goals and vision for the coming years? What is our mission? How are we worshipping? How healthy is our community life? What changes do we need to make in our nurturing and outreach programs? In addition, a congregation needs to reflect on how its organizational structure will bear the weight of this change.

However, knowing how you got to where you are and determining where you want to go are still not sufficient. Congregations also need clearly defined procedures for how they will conduct their pastoral search and accept the new pastoral leadership.

Congregations have many options for pastoral-leadership transitions. First, they may choose to work at it alone: "We are self-sufficient. We need no help from the outside. We know how to work at personnel issues. The last time, the conference and seminary were of no help."

Second, congregations may choose to leave the process to persons outside the congregation: "Since we don't know anyone outside our congregation, the conference should be recommending persons for us. We'll wait until we hear from them, since they should know what would be best for us. They know the students at the seminary and those around the church who are available. They owe it to us to get someone for us."

Third, a congregation may choose not to have a plan of action: "Someone will come along or someone from within will receive the call. Our congregation has always had leadership before, so we'll just trust the Holy Spirit."

While the pastoral selection process is always filled with unique congregational dynamics and overlaid with as many expectations as there are members in the congregation, the following guidelines can be helpful in producing satisfactory results:

1. Take time. Spend time expanding and broadening the base of ownership for the congregational expectations that exist in inviting a new pastor to serve. Listening and hearing our brothers and sisters cannot be overemphasized.

2. Build trust. Look for ways to build trust in the congregational process and in those who are facilitating the search. Job descriptions should be clear. The search committee should keep ongoing, regular and clear communication with the congregation during each step taken. Everyone wants to be "in the know" about the next pastor(s). "This is 'our church.' We have to live with the person."

3. Create teamness. Take this opportunity to team up with overseers, conference ministers and leadership commissions, seminaries and the Mennonite Board of Congregational Ministries. Teamness is mandatory in a time when persons called into pastoral leadership are fearful because of what might happen to them, when congregations dread thinking about upcoming pastoral changes and when the church institutions are searching for ways to be helpful to congregations.

Now is not the time to criticize the seminaries for not producing pastors. Share with the seminaries and conference leadership your congregational expectations and experiences and allow them to provide insights for your congregation.

Now is not the time for institutions to be "down" on the congregations for the unfortunate things they do to their pastors, or to critique pastors who haven't done everything "right." Listen to the ebb and flow of routine congregational life and walk alongside with understanding, sensitivity and friendship.

Now is not the time for pastors to go it alone or for congregations to prove their self-sufficiency. Affirm that we are the body of Christ and that the way of individualism and separatism is not only devastating, it is unbiblical.

Let's take time.
Let's build trust.
Let's create teamness.

After all, in the Kingdom of God, it's everybody's business.

Strengthening pastor-people partnerships

By David L. Sutter

Strong pastor-people partnerships are essential to the mission of the church. Yet, conference ministers and leaders of other denominations across North America report an alarming number of congregations and their pastors who have suffered abnormally high stress in their relationships.

Why are pastors and congregations having trouble relating to each other? Are there unhealthy patterns of church life and leadership or pastor-people partnerships that are contributing to this stress? What's the relationship between these patterns of stress and data on involuntary terminations of pastors (firings) and the numbers of persons willing to accept calls to pastoral leadership?

In 1987, concerned by these questions, leaders of the general boards of the Mennonite Church and the General Conference Mennonite Church asked the Mennonite Board of Education to address these concerns through the Pastorate Project. The Lilly Endowment, Inc., provided some of the funds in response to project proposals. (The Mennonite Church was one of only 10 groups nationwide to receive funding for the second phase. The project is the only one addressing pastorate concerns from the total congregation perspective.) Albert J. Meyer, executive secretary of MBE, is directing the project.

An MC-GC steering committee provides leadership to the project. Members are:

Dorothy Nickel Friesen, pastor, Manhattan (Kan.) Mennonite Fellowship;

Charlotte Holsopple Glick, president, Mennonite Board of Congregational Ministries, and co-pastor of Waterford Mennonite Church, Goshen, Ind.;

James Lapp, executive secretary, Mennonite Church; chair, Mennonite Church Comprehensive Leadership Development Strategy Group; and Marlin Miller, president, Goshen Biblical Seminary.

The first phase of the project — called Tier I — has been for exploration, study and writing. Duane Beck, pastor of Belmont Mennonite Church, Elkhart, Ind., and Ardean Goertzen, a Chicago-based consultant — gave primary research and writing leadership to the project in the first tier.

During this phase the project focused on four broad aspects of the congregational setting in which some understandings and practices are believed to contribute to pastor-people stress. These broad areas include:

I. The being, role and function of the pastor as an individual.

II. The congregational leadership group in its relationship to pastor, congregation and larger church.

III. Congregational discernment and action in matters relating to the roles of pastor and leadership group.

IV. Support and accountability relationships of pastor, leadership group and congregation with the larger church.

A question in each of these areas has been, What changes are needed in the present pastorate understandings and arrangements to support strengthened pastor-people partnerships in our churches?

Obviously, this issue is not one we can work at without the prayers and discernment of many persons. These discussions have not been easy nor void of expressions of vision and hope for future pastor-people partnerships. They have also not pretended to be complete, but rather part of an ongoing process of learning and understanding.

Tier I is now in its final months. Observations, affirmations, and responses have been gathered for further testing and implementation in the second phase of the project.

Tier II involves working at the pastor-people relationship within local congregations. Ten consultant-leaders will provide primary guidance for this work. These persons will work together on the Tier I findings and participate in consultant workshops. A consultant will work with each of the 16 Mennonite and General Conference Mennonite Churches to explore changes the findings from Tier I suggest would be helpful for that congregation.

Conference ministers and other church leaders suggested congregations for the project. Interested congregations were also invited to participate through Mennonite publications.

Consultants will begin working with pilot congregation during the first months of 1990 and will continue until the fall of 1991. Tier II of the pastorate project is scheduled for completion and reporting at the end of 1991.

We hope that during this time the pastorate project will present 16 congregations with helpful ways to strengthen their pastor-people partnership and thus further enable them to be God's church. Long term, leaders of the project hope to share the insights gained from the pilot congregations with other congregations across the church. The goal is to use the findings to reduce stress within the pastorate and to unite congregations for mission.

I feel called to the pastorate; now what do I do?

By Marcus Smucker

The call and preparation for pastoral ministry may include a process of discovery, discernment and discipline.

The discovery of interest often begins as the person is engaged in acts of ministry in the congregation or in some service assignment in the church. The person's interest becomes a challenge to try out certain functions or roles.

When ability begins to match interest, the sense of call becomes increasingly attractive. At this time the individual should engage in action and conversation. He or she should continue to participate in various forms of ministry and leadership functions and have dialogue with a few trusted, mature friends about the sense of call that may be emerging.

As the interest in pastoral ministry increases, the person needs further discernment concerning this sense of call. Not all who feel called to pastoral ministry have the personality and gifts essential for such a role.

Discernment needs to occur on several levels. Individuals can test their basic understandings about pastoral ministry with persons in the church including pastoral acquaintances and church leaders. They can also assess their gifts for ministry by getting feedback for particular acts of ministry and leadership. It is also important to have some assessment of personal elements such as temperament, personality, social skills, emotional development and basic character traits to help determine the "fit" of the person for ministerial leadership.

The discipline of preparation“ needs to complement the "sense of call" and "fit." The pastor must be competent in the knowledge and use of Scripture, able to think theologically, have analytical skills, and be effective in the integration of Scripture and theology with daily experience. The pastor must also have leadership skills related to congregational life such as the ability to help the church discover and articulate vision, the ability to help provide oversight and guidance for the congregation and the ability to help lead a congregation in its own decision-making and ministry. A pastor must also be able to communicate well, to teach, preach, counsel, confront and be able to nurture self, others and the church as a community.

Such knowledge and skills may be fostered in a variety of settings, for example, Bible institute, college or seminary. A good liberal-arts-college education is particularly important. It provides the foundation for the interpersonal and communication skills needed in the pastorate, as well as an awareness of the many professions and disciplines present among the members of a congregation. A cross-cultural education is useful in pastoral ministry because of the complexity of modern society. Knowledge of the Bible and theology provides confidence and certainty for preaching, teaching and dialogue.

Obviously pastoral ministry is multidimensional and requires attention to a variety of disciplines for study and the development of skills.

Should pastors be professionals?

By Everett J. Thomas

Last summer a Gospel Herald cover asked the question, "Can the church survive the professionalization of its leadership?" While this particular treatment covered all manner of church leadership, the question is most often asked of the pastorate.

The question is mischievous and carries with it some troublesome presuppositions. One such presupposition is that professionalism is bad; if our pastors are indeed "professionals," then that is not as good as whatever it was we had in the good old days.

Those raising the issue usually suggest that if our congregations are led by paid professionals, then the non-professionals (laity) will not feel like full-fledged members of the church. The argument goes something like this: our theology calls for every congregational member to exercise his/her priesthood and giftedness, but as congregations are increasingly led by paid leaders, those who are not paid (laity) fade into the pews where they are increasingly inclined to watch the professional perform. At this point, those making this case raise their Anabaptist hackles about "losing our priesthood-of-all-believers" tradition.

It seems to me that at least part of the confusion derives from a misinterpretation of the "priesthood-of-all-believers" concept. Although it was probably Martin Luther (not Menno Simons) who gave the phrase its Reformation currency, the concept has devolved into something other than its original meaning, that is, everyone can have a personal relationship with God, not just the priests.

In current parlance, the phrase seems to mean the "pastorhood of all believers." We seem to interpret the expression into supposing that every congregational member can be a pastor, and pastor someone else. This assumption suggests that, "Since every member is capable of pastoring others, it is inappropriate to pay one person (or ordain him/her) to do it. If we do pay someone to do it, and he/she does it well, then we will be inclined to not do it. And if we don't all do it, then we have lost the priesthood of all believers."

Perhaps this issue is a generational one. It seems to me that most of us under 40 see no problem with having a well-trained and well-paid leader pastoring our congregation. In fact, this post—World War II generation may be part of the reason it is happening. Many baby-boomer Mennonites came through the church at a time when the previous generation was reacting to something called "the authoritarian bishop structure." This reactionism stripped the pastorate of its power. In a public speech several years ago, one Mennonite churchman described the process as "eunuchizing" our leaders.

Few of us baby boomers stayed in the church, but those who have may be impatient with the impotent pastorate we have inherited. As a result, we now want people up front, men or women, who know what they are doing, why they are doing it and who are able to help us do it! This takes not only the spiritual depth and maturity of the bi-vocational pastors of the past, but education, training and a deep sense of commitment to the gifts God gives to every congregational member.

A professional pastor now must be trained in the biblical languages, model a careful and reverent hermeneutic, grasp the historical significance of the Christian church and the Anabaptist movement within it, preach God's word joyfully, confidently and prophetically, understand the rudiments of pastoral care (although not necessarily be a skilled counselor), appreciate the need for orderly administration in the church (although not necessarily manage the church's program), and want congregational life to nurture every member's faith and gifts.

Internship was vital in choice of pastorate

By John D. Yoder

Duane Beck hadn't given pastoral ministry much thought before coming to Goshen College in 1965 as a junior. He was a physical-education major who was interested in coaching on the high-school level.

Then two-thirds of the way through his junior year, he sensed a call to the pastorate. The call came through an experience in a psychology class with Atlee Beechy.

"We took several sessions for self-reflection about where we were going with our lives," Beck said. "I don't think I'd done much of that before."

After that self-analysis, he decided to explore the pastorate, keeping his physical-education interest as a "tent making" possibility.

His experience at Associated Mennonite Biblical Seminaries, Elkhart was spiritually enriching. "It was a new stage in my spiritual life. The Bible came alive, and I was able to make intellectual sense out of Christian faith."

But since he had gone to seminary directly out of college, he felt a lack of practical experience for applying what he was learning. He also realized that he didn't know what the pastorate was really like. To fill those voids, he signed up for the seminary's first internship program in 1969 after his second year.

"I needed to test out if the local church was viable in the Kingdom of God," he said. "I also needed to find out if I had the gifts and abilities to be a pastor."

The internship program was a vital part of his decision to continue in the pastorate. He felt that the congregation affirmed his gifts.

"I had an opportunity to do some preaching and lead worship, to do some counseling, visitation, administration, Christian education and get feed back in those areas. It was though those relationships that my skills as a pastor were first developed," he said.

Besides getting valuable practical experience, Beck also found a role model in pastor Peter Wiebe.

"Having Peter as a positive pastoral model was important. Watching him I was able to test my approach to leadership and pastoring."

After seminary he accepted the call to the pastorate in 1971 at Bethel Mennonite Church, West Liberty, Ohio.

"That congregation had the ability to take a seminarian and make a pastor out of him," Beck said laughing. "I was too young, only 25. Yet they trusted, challenged, guided and nurtured me. They provided a climate where I could develop as a leader."

In the full-time pastorate Beck continued to grow in his understanding of himself and congregational leadership.

"I discovered in the first six months that my real leadership and ministry grew out of my relationship to Christ, not from skills and theology. I developed a more spiritually disciplined life in prayer and reading Scripture. That was the single most important thing in my growth in preaching and teaching and in clarifying my vision."

Cynthia Friesen

As he grew in his understanding of the pastor's role, he began to reflect on the importance of pastoral leadership. "Seminary emphasized servant-leadership, an egalitarian approach," he said. "I translated that as a do-nothing leadership — just sit back and let them tell you what to do. Now my leadership has become more one of articulating vision and inspiring vision — what God wants us to do."

He further developed his leadership skills on a year's sabbatical leave in a clinical pastoral-education program. He then returned to West Liberty for two more years before becoming pastor at Belmont Mennonite Church in Elkhart.

When he left Bethel, his growth as a pastor was obvious. "When I finished my pastorate there, one member said, 'You've come a long way.' That was a compliment to the congregation, too. They allowed me to be myself, to do some creative things."

Having himself benefitted from an internship program, Beck was pleased to discover that Belmont saw part of its mission as one of helping to developing leadership through pastoral internships. The congregation has had four interns. Three of them worked full time for eight or nine months.

What does he attempt to "teach" pastoral interns? One primary task is helping students develop a pastoral identity. Pastors need to learn to "relate to people as a pastor," he said. "Some pastors take on the identity of a teacher, a social worker or a counselor. I think it's important that people know a pastor is relating to them out of the spiritual arena."

Beck also wants interns to learn from his mistakes. "Being a supervisor, I'm aware that I'm modeling, and I want to model my successes and failures. Interns should know that failures don't have to blow you away."

One thing he finds interns often must learn is the sense that a pastor really is a leader. "My definition of pastoral authority — borrowed from the Grubb Institute — involves the attitude one has toward the role one takes to forward the purposes of the church. Authority is not a power play designed to pull off what I want to do. Rather, we should ask, what are my responsibilities to move people along to our God-given purposes? I want interns to take responsibility to move people along."

Ultimately good congregational leadership should mobilize the congregation to accomplish its God-given purpose. "The exciting thing for me is that people start to discover what their mission is, what their slice of God's passion is," he said. "That's part of my role as a leader."

To celebrate, I have published a collection of haiku, poetry and short stories called Mother, Don't Lock Me in That Closet! He has written two previous books and published articles in trade journals. More than 200 of his haiku have appeared in 25 publications in the United States, Canada and Japan.

Michael H. Shank '71 is on the history of science faculty at the University of Wisconsin-Madison. Previously, he taught at Harvard and Emory. He is part of the new editorial staff for Isis: An International Review Devoted to the History of Science and its Cultural Influence.

The March, 1989 issue of the magazine reports that he has been appointed associate editor with special responsibility for book reviews. "A medievalist, Shank balances a team otherwise dominated by persons with more recent — some might say parochial — interests. . . . More than any other member of the editorial staff, Shank possesses the disciplinary breadth and linguistic skills of a Sartonian historian of science," according to the editorial.

Shank has published in journals such as Journal of the History of Biology and Signs: Journal of Women in Culture and Society. His book, Unless You Believe, You Shall Not Understand: Logic, University and Society in Late Medieval Vienna, was released in 1988. He has received a National Science Foundation Scholar's Award to continue his work on a history of natural philosophy and astronomy at the University of Vienna in the 15th century.

Judy Miller '78, Kayenta, Ariz., has been teaching and coaching at Monument Valley High School for the past 10 years. Teams she has coached have ranked in the top three in their conference and qualified for the state tournament in five of the last six years.

In August, Miller took her team to the International Youth Basketball festival in Milwaukee, Wis., marking the first time many on the team had been east of Albuquerque.

The high school is on a Navajo Indian reservation and is quite isolated. The shortest distance the team travels for away games is 90 miles one way; for some games the team makes a 600-mile trek. However, the distances the team travels together allows them to become well acquainted and Coach Miller enjoys that aspect.

Thut reminisces about family contributions

John Thut '23 writes that descendants of his great-grandfather, Bishop John Thut (1801-1867), have made significant contributions to Goshen College almost from the beginning of the institution's history.

"In the early years of Goshen College, B. Frank Thut taught at Goshen College," he said. "His sister, Mary, was the wife of Prof. E.J. Zook, who taught at GC until 1923. Frank Thut and Mary Zook were grandchildren of Bishop John Thut, as was Elvina Ebersole, the wife of A.S. Ebersole, head of Goshen's music department until 1922.

"I myself was a half-time faculty member at Goshen in my senior year, 1922-23. . . . Another of your present faculty members, Ron Milne '67, is a great-great-great-grandson of Bishop John Thut. Very many descendants of the bishop have been students at Goshen College. Some of them are now teaching at other Mennonite schools. For instance, John Blosser '70 (another great-great-great-grandson) teaches art at Hesston College. My own grandniece, Debra Detwiler Brubaker '79, teaches music at Bluffton College."

Thut also named the following family members as GC alumni: Mennonite Board of Education Executive Secretary Albert Meyer '50 (whose spouse and children are GC alumni); and Conrad Grebel College Archivist Samuel Steiner '68.

Thut, an avid family historian, lives in West Liberty, Ohio.

Goshen College Mission Statement and Desired Outcomes

Goshen College is a four-year liberal arts college dedicated to the development of informed, articulate, sensitive, responsible Christians. As a ministry of the Mennonite Church, we seek to integrate Christian values with educational and professional life. As a community of faith and learning, we strive to foster personal, intellectual, spiritual and social growth. We view education as a moral activity that produces servant-leaders for the church and world.

At Goshen College we intend to create a community of faith and learning wherein students will be developing...

1. faith that is active and reflective.
2. intercultural openness with the ability to function effectively with people of other world views.
3. an ability to communicate effectively in a variety of sign systems.
4. the ability to think actively and strategically.
5. an understanding of the transcendent reality of aesthetic and spiritual experience.
6. personal integrity that fosters ability to resolve conflict and to promote justice.
7. leadership ability that empowers self and others.
8. an understanding of responsible stewardship for human systems and the environment.
9. a sense of vocational direction.
10. a healthy understanding of self and of others that is reflected in social relationships of interdependence and mutual accountability.

Award nominations

This year the alumni association honored five alumni at the fall alumni banquet. They received a letter of recognition from the Alumni Board president and a "Culture for Service Award." Marvin Bartel of the Goshen College Art department created the awards especially for the five alumni .

The idea for an award honoring alumni came from the Goshen College Alumni Board. The board thought it proper and worthwhile to recognize alumni whose lives represent the college motto, and at its October 1988 meeting, formed an Awards and Recognition Committee for the purpose of defining and implementing a recognition process. The Board expects this to be an annual event.

Using the guidelines in this article, we invite you to suggest nominees for this award.

In the past 95 years, many Goshen College alumni have contributed to a broad spectrum of life through commitment to family, church, community and professional work.

The nominee for "Culture for Service Awards" shall:

- be an alumna/us of Goshen College (one who has received at least 24 credit hours from Goshen College)
- exemplify the GC motto "Culture for Service" and live a life consistent with the Goshen College Mission Statement and Desired Outcomes for Students (see p. 17 of this Bulletin)
- have a distinguished record of service and/or achievement to home, church, college, community, world.

Please return to the Alumni Office by Jan. 10, 1990.

I suggest that the Awards and Recognition Committee consider:

Calling all alumni, parents and friends

The Goshen College Alumni Association is sponsoring two international study tours in the summer 1990. Both are designed by college faculty and the alumni board in response to requests from alumni and friends.

Kenya: An inside view

June 26 - July 12, 1990

Join your friends for an exciting journey inside Kenya led by Mary Oyer, professor emerita of music, who has studied, taught and traveled extensively throughout the country. Tour participants will:

- enjoy musical events at the National Music Festival
- participate in sessions on African music led by Mary Oyer
- spend one night at Mountain Lodge Hotel watching animals feed
- become acquainted with an MCC-Masai camel project
- experience bird watching in the world-famous Rift Valley region
- take a walking tour through Nairobi with local guides
- visit a village chief whose son is a Goshen College alumnus
- dine as guests of the United Kenya Club
- visit Karen Blixen's home (Out of Africa).

Costa Rica: An inside view

August 12 - 22, 1990

Experience the sights, sounds and learnings that are Costa Rica. Professor of Anthropology Ron Stutzman and Phyllis Stutzman are leading the current Study-Service Term in that country and will be leaders of the August 1990 Study Tour. Here are some unique opportunities for tour participants:

- experience the SST network in a visit to El Tigre
- travel to Cahuita National Park on the Atlantic coast
- enjoy a concert at the national theatre
- tour to villages in the Central Valley
- study geology while visiting the Volcano Irazu
- dialog with government, church and civic leaders
- hike in Monteverde, a cloud-forest preserve.

The alumni office has a detailed brochure and itinerary for each study tour. To receive your copy, make your request to the alumni office today.

Speakers encourage students to preserve their ideals

Two recent speakers in the Frank and Betty Jo Yoder Public Affairs Lecture Series challenged Goshen College students to continue being idealistic.

Activist Ralph Nader delighted an audience of more than 1,000 persons Oct. 4 by speaking for 90 minutes and following that speech with a question-and-answer dialogue that lasted until nearly midnight.

In his speech, Nader focused on a general malaise that he believes is afflicting the United States. Calling citizen action "the basic metabolism of democracy," Nader decried Americans' increasing focus on private life.

"We've lost our problem-solving ability as a nation," he said. "Our political leaders are not into making us face reality; they're into flattery.

"I'm pretty upset with politicians waving the flag, saying 'We're No. 1' as we slide into the abyss."

Now is the time for "methodically controlled indignation," Nader said. Among his suggestions for action were "Campus Watch," an organization of college students who would monitor the voting records of their district's member of the U.S. House of Representatives, and making sure that "schools provide students with opportunities to learn how to become effective citizens."

"Our generation has failed the younger generation in many ways," the 55-year-old attorney said. "We've told the younger generation we don't have time for them."

Nader works closely with many young people, and he presented a somewhat negative picture of America's youth.

"I see people so full of potential energy for the advancement of good and justice in the world, and not one percent of that energy is expended. It is remarkable how many young people don't see the forest for the trees, and even don't see the trees."

However, Nader sees hope in "auspicious signs of the recovery of citizen nerve," including grassroots movements against landfills and incinerators.

The democratic process works from the bottom up, he said. "Washington will never shape up until this community turns around."

Many social problems stem from people's lack of involvement with their own communities and families, the activist believes.

"A lot of unhappiness in our country comes from people feeling frustrated. A lot of addictions come from people who feel they're not needed and have no purpose in life," Nader said.

He sees citizen action not just as political activity, but activity that enables individuals to place themselves within a larger and more meaningful context, which enables them to realize their own potential.

"Once people get involved, once they connect their own intellectual talents with their value system, a whole new aspect of their personalities comes up. They become very interesting, very real," Nader said.

An earlier speaker also demonstrated that idealists are not an endangered species. Vivienne Verdon-Roe, an Academy Award-winning documentary filmmaker, spoke to approximately 250 persons in Umble Center Sept. 13. Her speech was co-sponsored by the Fourth Freedom Forum, Goshen.

John D. Yoder

A self-described former "political blob," she urged the audience not to surrender to apathy but to try to make a difference in their daily lives.

Verdon-Roe came to the United States 12 years ago from her native England. Two years ago, she became a U.S. citizen "because I wanted to vote," she said. "I love my new home, I love the diversity of people and ideas in the United States. I love the freedom to be me. Coming here, I felt the possibilities open up."

However, Verdon-Roe had no political motive for immigrating to the U.S. "When I came here, I was a political blob," she said. "I thought social responsibility was answering dinner-party invitations."

Trained as a schoolteacher, Verdon-Roe became a filmmaker after viewing another film, "The Last Epidemic," in 1982. She was so disturbed by the film about nuclear war that she drove through the hills around Oakland, Calif., all night. The next day she volunteered to help establish the Oakland office of the Alameda Nuclear Freeze campaign.

As part of her work for peace, Verdon-Roe began a project in which she interviewed children about their perceptions of nuclear war. Ian Thierman, the maker of "The Last Epidemic," contacted her about making her project into a film.

The result was "In the Nuclear Shadow: What Can the Children Tell Us?" which was nominated for an Academy Award. In 1986, Verdon-Roe and Thierman released "Women — For America, For the World," a half-hour film of interviews with prominent American women about nuclear war. "Women — For America, For the World" won the 1986 Academy Award for the best short documentary.

Verdon-Roe urged the audience not to be intimidated by the apparently overwhelming complexity of the nuclear arms race. "Go for it. Going for it means having the courage to stand up for your beliefs. True patriotism is speaking up when you see your country off course."

The arms race itself does not spring from a great, nameless evil, but from "a consistent lack of respect for life in all the small ways," Verdon-Roe said.

Stoltzfus apppointed to third term

Victor E. Stoltzfus has been named to a third term as president of Goshen College by the Mennonite Board of Education.

Stoltzfus's three-year term, which begins July 1, 1990, came upon a recommendation from the Goshen College Board of Overseers and followed a presidential evaluation by a four-person committee appointed by the Board of Education. The committee comprised chair Robert Shreiner, Gerald Kaufman and Sara Wengerd from the Board of Overseers, plus Helen Lapp from the Board of Education. MBE staff person Loren Swartzendruber handled staff work for the committee.

Stoltzfus was first named Goshen's president in 1984 following three years as academic dean of the college.

"President Stoltzfus's commitment to Christ and his spiritual roots are deep," noted the review committee in its report. "His clear articulation of these moorings are much appreciated.

"We strongly affirm the president for his enthusiasm for Goshen College and its mission in the Mennonite Church," the report continued. "He has been instrumental in strengthening the relationships of the college with conference and congregational leaders, with parents and with alumni. He has done much to increase many people's confidence in Goshen College.

The committee affirmed President Stoltzfus for his leadership of Goshen College in its numerous achievements over the past five years. These include:

1. The endowment portfolio has nearly doubled in five years, with $4.5 million added.
2. The enrollment of the college has increased by approximately 200 students.
3. The consolidation effort was implemented at the direction of the Board of Overseers.
4. A campus master plan has been completed and adopted by the board.
5. More than $2 million has been received in gifts and pledges in addition to the endowment monies.
6. The congregational student aid program has increased dramatically, and the college has responded to the church in offering matching funds.
7. The operating budgets have been balanced.
8. The Conference Advisory Board has been formed.
9. Several instances of national recognition have been received.
10. Numerous goals in the strategic plan have been met.
11. The Board of Overseers has been reorganized into four committees.

"President Stoltzfus has brought many positive qualities to the presidency," the committee concluded. "It is important to ensure that those gifts are maximized to the full during the years ahead."

In making its recommendation, the review committee solicited comments from a cross section of persons involved with Goshen College. This included members of the Mennonite Board of Education and of the Goshen College Board of Overseers; Mennonite Church district-conference leaders and members of the Conference Advisory Board; members of the campus community, including teaching and administrative faculty and support staff, and additional student, parent, alumni and community leaders.

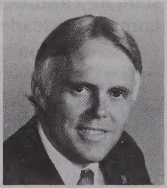
First-year student Monica J. Hochstedler receives a measles vaccination from GC senior nursing student Nancy Burkhardt. Hochstedler is the daughter of Wayne and Kathryn Hochstedler, Harrisonburg, Va., and Burkhardt is the daughter of Don and Ferne Burkhardt, Petersburg, Ontario. Supervised by registered nurses, Goshen College nursing students gave vaccinations during "Measles Prevention Day" Sept. 25. Goshen College's Health Center offered vaccinations to students susceptible to measles at a walk-in clinic set up in the school's gymnasium. Because measles cases had occurred at other Indiana colleges and universities, the Indiana State Board of Health had urged all institutions of higher learning to offer vaccinations to susceptible students. Susceptible students are those born since 1957 who had not had a measles vaccination since 1980. The vaccinations were not compulsory. Out of the 1,148 full-time and part-time students registered at Goshen College, 641 were found to be susceptible. Of those 641, 470 (74 percent) were vaccinated during the vaccination drive. The vaccine was provided at cost by Goshen's Parkside Pharmacy.

Goshen Realtor named to board



The Mennonite Board of Education has appointed Myrl D. Nofziger, Goshen, Ind., to the Goshen College Board of Overseers.

Nofziger, 49, is a Realtor with Coldwell Banker/ Hoogenboom-Nofziger, Inc. He also is president of H N Corp, vice president of Roxbury Park, Inc., and a co-partner in the development of business and industrial buildings and land and residential projects.

A 1964 graduate of Goshen College with a major in education, Nofziger received a master's degree in education from Indiana University-Bloomington in 1966.

Nofziger is past president of the Indiana Real Estate Association and of the Goshen Board of Realtors, a director of the National Association of Realtors (NAR) and a member of the NAR finance committee. He also is a member of College Mennonite Church, the Goshen College Alumni Board and the executive committees of Greencroft, Inc., Goshen, and Goshen General Hospital.

He is the son of Kathryn Nofziger, Goshen, and the late Jesse L. Nofziger. He and his late wife, Ardith, are the parents of two daughters, Angela, a Goshen College junior majoring in communication, and Renee, a student at Goshen High School.

John D. Yoder

Soccer

The soccer team finished 8-6-5 (1-1-2 in the Mid-Central Conference) and qualified for District-21 play for the 20th-consecutive year. GC is the only school in Indiana to appear in every tourney during that period.

Jerry Zehr led the team in scoring with 10 goals, and Scott Bodiker led in assists with seven, including a school-tying record three-in-one-game against Bluffton. Goalie Scott McDowell allowed only 29 goals in 19 games, including six shutouts.

Jerry Zehr, Scott Bodiker and Kendal Bauman were selected to the all-conference and all-district teams. Jeff Kauffman also was selected all conference.

Field hockey

The field hockey team ended the season at 13-9 (1-1 in the Hoosier Conference for Women) with a third-place tie in District 21 and third place at the Michigan-Indiana-Kentucky Conference tournament.

Michelle Yoder set school records for goals in one season (20) and in a career (47 with one season of eligibility remaining), and Linda Miller set a school record for assists in a season with 10. Kathy Nussbaum, Bonnie Stoltzfus and Yoder were named to the all-district team. Cindy Harnish, along with Nussbaum, Stoltzfus and Yoder was named to the all-HCW team.

Tennis

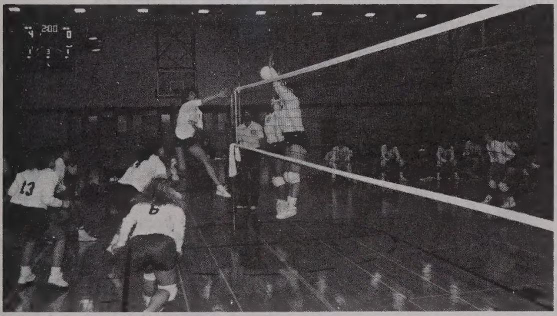
Men's tennis lost a number of close matches, finishing 4-5 in dual meets (2-3 for fourth in MCC), fourth in the MCC tournament and ninth out of 14 at the District 21 tourney. Rob Adams was named all-district with a 7-4 record at No. 1 singles. Co-captains Terry Slabach and Sean Miller had solid seasons with records of 8-4 (No.2 singles) and 7-6 (No. 3), respectively. Rob Adams was selected to the all-conference team.

Women's tennis ended at 5-5 in dual meets (2-3 in HCW play), and finished fourth in the HCW tourney and sixth out of 13 teams at the District-21 tourney. Sue Conrad was named to the all-HCW team with a 8-6 record. Jody Cripe was 7-5 at No. 2 singles and Ingrid Hess was 12-4 at No. 3 singles. Sue Conrad was selected to the all-conference team.

Cross country

Men's cross country was led by Geoff Douglas, who broke a nine-year old school cross-country record by 26 seconds with a 25:30 at the MCC meet. He qualified for nationals with a ninth place finish at the District-21 meet and was named to the all-district team. The team was fourth at the MCC meet and sixth out of 10 teams at districts. Injuries plagued the team much of the year, and GC was even unable to field a team for one meet. Pat Showalter had the team's second-best time at 27:46, and senior Dave Little's 28:05 was the third-best overall time.

The women's cross-country team was never able to field a full team but was led by first-year student Lisa Bacher. Bacher placed 31st at districts and had a best time of 21:20 at the Roadrunner Invitational.



John D. Yoder

Volleyball

The volleyball team finished 25-12, losing its first two games in the District-21 tourney. GC was undefeated in Hoosier Conference for Women play with a 4-0 record during the season and won the HCW tournament championship. Jan Helmuth, Jennifer North, Rita Wyse and Jan Kolb were named to the all-HCW team, and North was selected to the All-District 21 team. Head coach Sue Roth was named HCW coach of the year. —Jeff Birky

Enrollment rises again

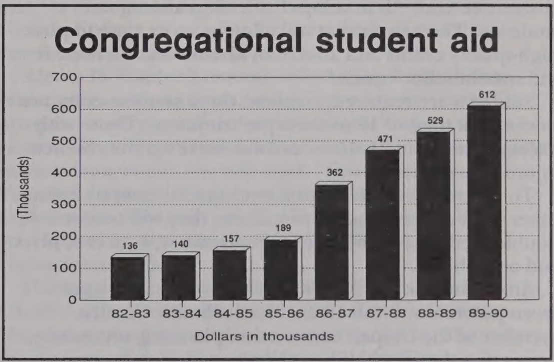
For the fourth consecutive year, Goshen College's fall-trimester enrollment rose. There are 1,152 students on campus for the fall term, including 1,042 full-time students and 110 part-time students.

The 1,152 students represent the full-time equivalent of 1,093.9. The full-time equivalency figure is the total number of credit hours being taken divided by 13 hours, the GC definition of a full-time trimester load, interim registrar Stan North Martin said. In the 1988-89 fall trimester, there were 1,082 full- and part-time students who were the full-time equivalent of 1,036.7.

Included in the total are 296 full-time first-year students, 252 full-time sophomores, 234 juniors and 235 seniors.

Three factors contributed to the higher enrollment, Martin said. One is that the first-year (freshman) class is larger. Another is that the number of students returning is also higher. A third is that the Class of 1989, which graduated last spring, was a very small class.

— Lois Landis Kurowski



More than $611,559 has been committed by 183 Mennonite congregations and four district conferences to help GC students with their college costs this year. The 1989-90 amount will help 598 students.

New chapel-convo schedule expands program potential

Some things never change, and many GC alumni probably thought the four-a-week chapel-convocation schedule was one of them. However, a new schedule took effect this fall, reducing chapel/convo meetings to three per week.

Continuing faculty frustration with the old schedule prompted the change.

"We heard that the meeting times were too short, too frequent and the quality of the events did not adequately serve GC's intellectual and spiritual needs," said Delmar Good, professor of economics, who chaired the 1986 steering committee charged with a complete review of the college's program.

The concern arose again in a special faculty workshop in August 1987. Changing the chapel/convo schedule was second only to faculty needs on the list of GC characteristics that needed improvement.

Stan North Martin, interim registrar, and his staff analyzed attendance on the old four-weekly schedule. All Thursday events had low attendance, reaching a low of 118 persons on a 1988 Thursday.

Under the new format, chapels alternate with convocations. Each session is 30 minutes long, with an extra session scheduled every two weeks. There is a 30-minute block of free time after the assemblies.

Under the old format, those attending all chapels and convocations spent 80 minutes weekly in the sessions. Now they spend 90 minutes weekly in chapels and convocations.

"Chapel/convocation is a prime time to share our artistic and cultural skills," Doyle Preheim, professor of music and chair of the chapel/convocation review committee said. "It develops leadership among our students. The new format will allow us more time to plan high-quality events and all-school assemblies. We hope it will sustain school spirit."

Students are required to attend three sessions every two weeks for a total of 19 sessions per trimester. Those with excessive unexcused absences must make up the absences in order to graduate.

To encourage students to attend special campus events other than chapels and convocations, they will receive double credit for attending special lectures, concerts, plays and art exhibits.

Attendance in the fall 1989 trimester has increased seven percent over fall 1988. Martha Smith Good, a member of the chapel/convocation planning committee, hopes that the new half hour between chapels/convocations and the next class will give students, faculty and staff time to enjoy "the kind of getting to know each other that takes place in a church after Sunday morning worship."

Book notes GC drug and alcohol policies

Peterson's Drug and Alcohol Programs and Policies at Four-Year Colleges is a new reference guide for prospective college students, their parents and their counselors. Rather than focus on whether drugs and alcohol are used on a campus, the book focuses on the methods used by 900 colleges and universities to address the problem of substance abuse.

"At Goshen College, we use a multi-faceted approach in dealing with the alcohol issue," Norman L. Kauffmann, GC dean of student development, said. "Alcohol use and problems related to use have made inroads among our student body, but I think the most important facet of our program is the singular dedication and commitment of all our faculty. That's the most important reason for the success of our programs."

Kauffmann is one of five GC faculty members who work with substance-abuse issues. Others are Martha Smith Good, campus minister; Willard S. Krabill, GC physician; Russel A. Liechty, director of counseling, and Larry Rupp, residence-life director.

The college communicates its policies and its support of abstinence through training programs for staff members and written procedures to which both staff members and students may refer when substance-abuse problems surface.

Support services for recovering substance abusers include private counseling, support groups and a chapter of Alcoholics Anonymous. Disciplinary steps for infractions involving substance abuse vary, but they can include chemical-dependency assessment, counseling, fines, volunteer work in the community, warnings, probation and suspension.

Board approves budget and hires four new faculty members

The Goshen College Board of Overseers approved a $12.3 million operating budget for the 1989-90 fiscal year and approved the appointment of four new faculty members at the meeting Sept. 28-30.

In approving the budget, the board also celebrated 50 years of balanced budgets. GC ended its 1988-89 fiscal year with a slight surplus.

Appointed to the faculty were Joseph Alter, assistant professor of anthropology and sociology; William Frisbie, director of the Instructional Materials Center; Janette Yoder, director of special programs in college relations, and Clayton Shetler, director of the physical plant.

Alter will replace GC professor of anthropology Ron Stutzman for two years while Stutzman serves as a Study-Service Term leader in Costa Rica and takes a sabbatical. Alter received a bachelor's and a master's degree from Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn., and a master's degree and a Ph.D. in social and cultural anthropology from the University of California at Berkeley.

The son of Presbyterian missionaries to India, he did field research for his dissertation in a village in north India. He and his wife, Nicole Constable, live in Kalamazoo, Mich., where she is a faculty member at Western Michigan University.

Frisbie will replace William Miller, who has become adviser to international students at GC and will help the admissions office recruit international students. A 1983 Goshen College graduate, Frisbie received a master's degree in television with a minor in media management from CBN University, Virginia Beach, Va., in 1989.

He and his wife, Carol, live in Goshen with their three daughters, Shawna, Cacia and Corissa.

Janette Klopfenstein Yoder fills a newly created position in the college relations office. Formerly a resident of West Liberty, Ohio, Yoder attended Goshen College and received a bachelor's degree in language arts from Defiance (Ohio) College. She did graduate work at Wright State University, Dayton, Ohio.

Yoder is the author of two books, My Walk Through Grief (1976) and Tell Me About Death, Mommy (1977), published by Herald Press, Scottdale, Pa. The books grew out of her life experiences after her first husband, Roger Klopfenstein, died in 1973. She also taught English at West Liberty (Ohio) High School.

She lives in Elkhart with her husband, L. Douglas Yoder, D.V.M., and their son Justin. Her son Chad Klopfenstein is a 1989 Goshen College graduate; Dereck Klopfenstein is a sophomore at GC.

The position filled by Clayton Shetler, director of physical plant, formerly was filled by employees of a private company. Shetler studied at Goshen College for two years and received an associate's degree in building construction technology from Ferris State University, Big Rapids, Mich. He has also studied construction field administration and construction management techniques at the University of Wisconsin-Madison.

He formerly was a control construction manager for Ira C. Mast & Son, Elkhart, and had previously worked for The Lead Group, Goshen, Booms Construction Company, Bad Axe, Mich., and Townsend & Bottum, Inc., Ann Arbor, Mich.

Shetler and his wife Rose live in Goshen with their children Jonathan and Deborah.

After some discussion, four Goshen College staff positions were changed to faculty positions. The positions are database programmer/analyst, now filled by Galen Graber; director of the Learning Resource Center, now filled on an interim basis by Ginger Miller; microcomputer support analyst, now filled by Kevin Gross, and Umble Center technician, now filled by Durrell Brenneman Ramer.

The board of overseers also met with the Goshen College Conference Advisory Board (CAB) Sept. 29. The CAB is composed of representatives of seven Mennonite Church conferences to whom Goshen College relates.

Lloyd Miller, Goshen, Ind., one of the Indiana-Michigan Conference representatives, chairs the CAB. Donella Clemens, Souderton, Pa., representing the Franconia Conference, is vice chair, and Steve Ropp, Bloomington, Ill., representing the Illinois Conference, is the secretary.

The CAB and the overseers discussed the CAB's report on discussions about three of the outcomes listed in GC's "Statement of Desired Outcomes." The three outcomes examined concern the development of faith, personal integrity and leadership. — Lois Landis Kurowski

A 1989 Goshen College graduate has been named interim director of career services and orientation at Goshen College, Norm Kauffmann, dean of student development, announced.

Aletha D. Stahl will oversee orientation for both first-year and transfer students, and will provide resources for prospective employers and seniors embarking on their careers. In conjunction with the Goshen College collegiate studies department, she will teach "Foundations for Vocational Choices," a course for students who are exploring various major areas of study. Stahl is a 1985 graduate of Eastern Mennonite High School, Harrisonburg, Va.

During the academic year 1988-89, she assisted Fred Litwiller, the director of career services and orientation. She also worked as a student assistant to Shirley Showalter, the director of collegiate studies, and Mary Eleanor Bender, professor emerita of French, and as a camp counselor in Quebec and Virginia.

Stahl replaces Litwiller who is on sabbatical leave at Western Michigan University, Kalamazoo, Mich.

Good named to Kreider Chair

Delmar G. Good, GC professor of economics and chair of the GC department of accounting, business and economics, has been named to the Carl Kreider Chair in Economics.

The Kreider Chair was established in 1978 by Howard and Myra Brembeck, Goshen, Ind., in honor of Carl J. Kreider, Goshen College dean emeritus. Kreider was the first holder of the Kreider Chair and occupied it until Good was named to succeed him.

The Goshen College Board of Overseers marked the passing of the Kreider Chair to Good at a dinner Sept. 29. The Brembecks were honored at the dinner for their many contributions to Goshen College, including the endowment for the Kreider Chair.

A native of Fisher, Ill., Good has been a member of the Goshen College faculty since 1967. He is the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Joseph C. Good and a 1962 graduate of Goshen College, where he majored in mathematics. Good received a master's degree in 1964 and a doctoral degree in economics in 1970 from the University of Illinois at Urbana.

Since joining the GC faculty, Good has taken two sabbaticals. He received a Lilly Endowment, Inc., faculty open fellowship for his 1978-79 sabbatical during which he served as a legislative aide to U.S. Sen. Mark O. Hatfield (R-Ore.).

During the 1986-87 school year, he studied management and organizational behavior at the Indiana University School of Business, Bloomington.

At Goshen College, Good has taught economics, statistics and management. He and his wife Lou Ann live in Goshen. Their daughter Kendra attends Goshen College and their son Chris is a student at Bethany Christian High School. — Lois Landis Kurowski

Faculty uphold alcohol policy

Goshen College faculty members have recommitted themselves to upholding the college's policy of having an alcohol-free campus. At the same time faculty members pledged themselves to work creatively and aggressively at problems created by alcohol use and abuse.

These actions were part of a day-long faculty workshop on alcohol use held on campus Aug. 29. The workshop was a response to some confusion among students and some churches about the college's position on the use of alcohol. John Paul Lederach, Mennonite Conciliation Services, led the workshop.

The college policy on alcohol use is spelled out in the Student Handbook. It says: "Goshen College considers the use of alcoholic beverages and illegal drugs detrimental to individual and community health. . . ." Because of the unwholesome consequences of alcohol use, "Goshen College recommends non-use as the most appropriate lifestyle choice. Alcoholic beverages and illegal drugs are prohibited from the campus and all college-related functions."

While having an alcohol-free campus is the goal, the college has not always met that goal, partly because students are coming to campus with a history of alcohol consumption. A 1987-88 survey of the student body showed that 58 percent consumed alcohol at least occasionally before coming to Goshen, said Norman Kauffmann, dean of student development. The same survey showed that alcohol consumption declined each year students remained at GC.

In part those statistics about prior-to-college use reflect a much more tolerant attitude in the homes from which students come, as well as pervasive media advertising that equates alcohol consumption with the good life.

In light of this reality, GC President Victor Stoltzfus asked Kauffmann to chair an ad hoc committee to plan a faculty workshop that would develop a consensus statement on the issue. The statement says:

"We acknowledge an alcohol problem on this campus. As a faculty we commit ourselves to an increased effort on the part of the total campus community to foster an alcohol-free campus. We oppose alcohol abuse anywhere."

In publicizing the statement, Kauffmann recognized that it is subject to possible misinterpretation. "Our alcohol problem is minor in comparison to the alcohol abuse on many college campuses," he said. "But that doesn't mean we should ignore it or not talk about it. We want to deal with the issue openly, and this statement is one way of letting the church and community know where we stand." —John D. Yoder

Dan A. Liechty, a 1988 Goshen College graduate and resident of Goshen, has joined the administrative faculty at Goshen College as a counselor in admissions.

Liechty will work with prospective first-year students in Kansas and transfers from around the country.

Since his graduation from Goshen College, he has assisted J. Howard Kauffman, professor emeritus of sociology, researching and surveying Mennonite Church members throughout North America. In 1985 and 1986, he served with Mennonite Central Committee in Taiwan, teaching English and working in a Mennonite hospital in Hualien, Taiwan.

Liechty replaces Stan Miller, who became the interim director of Admissions. — Karen Kurtz

MNA names Witmer 'Nurse of the Year'

The Mennonite Nurses Association named Linda E. Witmer, GC associate professor of nursing and community health, "Nurse of the Year" at the association's joint banquet with the Mennonite Medical Association July 31 in Normal, Ill.

Witmer, a 1973 graduate of Eastern Mennonite College, was commended for her nine years of work among the Kekchi Indians of Guatemala for the Eastern Board of Missions and the Mennonite Central Committee. While in Guatemala, Witmer, along with Debbie Yoder, established and administered a rural health program. She co-wrote four books in the Kekchi language, also illustrating the books with original artwork.

After receiving two master's degrees from the University of North Carolina in 1982, Witmer worked for the Chester County (Pa.) Public Health Department. She worked with homeless people and helped found "Bridge of Hope," a shelter for homeless women and children in Coatesville, Pa.

At GC, Witmer teaches courses in community-health nursing. In 1989, she created the course "Caring for the Poor," in which students worked in community health clinics, a shelter for the homeless and migrant-worker camps.

Community-health nursing offers Christians an opportunity for witnessing to their faith, Witmer believes. That's what attracted her to the field.

"I like community health nursing because it is about empowering people," she said. "I feel a call to be with the poor and oppressed, with those whom society does not account for. It's exciting to me to walk with people in their suffering and to bring hope to them."

Sherer 'Music Teacher of the Year'

Lon Sherer, GC professor of music, received the "Teacher of the Year" award Oct. 21 from the Indiana Music Teachers Association.

In the presentation, IMTA president Annette Conklin noted particularly Sherer's achievements as a teacher, calling him a teacher who "cares deeply about each student, young or old, gifted or slow." She noted that he has achieved his teaching excellence while also being an administrator, performer, conductor and scholar.

The award was noteworthy because it almost always goes to a piano teacher.

Sherer first became a teacher as a way of performing alternative service. A native of Michigan, he received his bachelor's degree in music from Michigan State University in 1954 and his master's degree in music from the University of Michigan in 1956.

At that time, the Detroit Symphony encouraged young violinists to consider performing.

"I always assumed I'd play," Sherer said. "That changed when I became a conscientious objector in 1956. As my alternative service, I found myself teaching at the Woodstock School in the foothills of the Himalayas."

"I was really thrown into the thick of it. I had two orchestras, a band and 37 private students," he added.

Teaching at the school was a formative experience for him.

"Part of it was the unusual nature of the school; Woodstock is an international school. At that time, there were 19 countries represented in the student body and six or seven among the faculty.

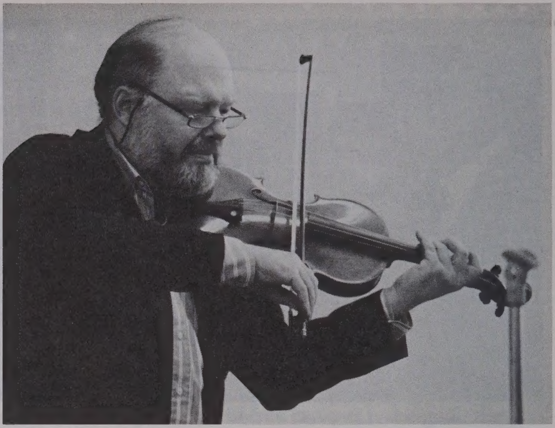
"That experience got me excited about the process of being a teacher," he added. "To this day, I hear from, and occasionally see, students I had in India."

After teaching at Woodstock for three years, Sherer returned home by way of Europe. Although he had applied at several places, there was no job waiting for him when he left India. However, a letter from Goshen College changed that situation.

"Mary Oyer wrote to me, inviting me to teach at Goshen College," he recalled. "The letter caught up with me in Amsterdam. I had known her at the University of Michigan. I had a lot of respect for her and considered her a friend."

The atmosphere at GC was similar to the Woodstock atmosphere, Sherer found. "People still didn't have television here. There was the same kind of good feeling and interest in serious music," he recalled.

Sherer's interest in teaching was focused even more when he had a tumor removed from his right acoustic nerve in 1975, leaving him deaf in one ear and with a partial loss of muscle and nerve control on the right side. He was unable to play his violin and had to re-learn violin playing completely, becoming a student again.



Dele J. Miller

"I remember very clearly doing everything I knew to teach myself, and failing at it," Sherer said. "I remember reading (Shinichi) Suzuki's dictum that mastery equals understanding plus 10,000 times. Suddenly, I asked myself, 'What is it that I want to learn?'"

Sherer studied with Suzuki, the Japanese innovator in music education, in 1979 in Japan. He also studied with Kato Havas in Oxford, England, in 1983.

From the experience of re-learning violin playing, Sherer drew the insights which became Practicing, A Liturgy of Self-Learning, a small book published in 1988. The book has sold more than 500 copies.

Looking back on 33 years as a teacher, Sherer says he has changed.

"I have more empathy now with students, empathy to try to see what the student is trying to do. I've modified my ideas about what goals or outcomes are proper in the studio. I like to see goals or outcomes as areas that point towards a good direction rather than giving motivation."

Sherer founded GC's string preparatory program for students younger than college age. The preparatory students have changed through the years, he said.

Many of the pre-college students today have "pressure-cooker schedules" that include not only music lessons but also playing sports, heavy academic loads and an emphasis on achievement in all areas.

"I think (such schedules) have to have an impact on people when they come to college," he said. "It makes it rather difficult to confront the concept of learning and the joy of learning. If I could be a magician and wave a magic wand, I would like us at GC to help our students discover the joy of personal learning."

Sherer still has lunch occasionally with the 85-year-old who was his major professor at the University of Michigan, and "I still learn from him," he noted. However, as a student, Sherer said, "I had teachers — I didn't have heroes. I've lived long enough that I've experienced renewed respect for some of my teachers, what they knew and what they tried to do."

However, the IMTA "Teacher of the Year" considers his own teaching technique a work-in-progress.

"I've never gotten so good at it that I can say, 'I've got it down,'" he said. "One is always discovering things that would have made one a better teacher five years ago."

JLB celebrates 10 years of the China exchange in Chengdu

Two days of celebrations marked the 10th anniversary of the exchange program between Goshen College and the Sichuan Province Education Commission in Chengdu, Sichuan, People's Republic of China, Oct. 14-15.

J. Lawrence Burkholder, president emeritus, represented the college at the celebrations. Don and Carolyn Blosser, leaders of the Goshen College Study-Service unit currently in Chengdu, and the 21 GC students in the unit also participated.

Burkholder negotiated the first exchange agreement in 1979 during a visit to Chengdu. He and his wife Harriet served as relief workers in China during World War II.

Sichuan Province is the second largest province in the PRC with a population of approximately 100 million. Its major cities include Chengdu, the provincial capital, and Chongqing (Chungking), the nation's leading river port.

Don Blosser, GC associate professor of Bible, described the celebrations in a letter received Oct. 23 in Goshen.

Burkholder began the celebration with a speech Oct. 13 to the faculty and students of the English language department at Sichuan Teachers University (STU) in Chengdu. During their Study-Service Term, GC students assist in English-language classes at Sichuan Teachers University.

The Blossers and Burkholder met with the current president of STU, the past president and several other top officials of the university on the morning of Oct. 14.

"This was a friendly, polite meeting, but I was not prepared for the depth of feeling the Chinese leaders have for this program," Blosser wrote. "The English scores of their majors have been rising steadily, and are now among the top in the province.

"They attribute this to two things: the major improvement in teaching quality shown by teachers who have been at Goshen, and the presence of GC students with their teaching and informal interaction with Chinese students . . . . (the past president of STU) spoke of his deep satisfaction with the program, how it has remained substantially the same over the 10 years, proving the validity and wisdom of the venture taken in 1979."

The Chinese teachers of English who have studied at Goshen College have become the "backbone of the teaching within the foreign language department, and several have been promoted to leadership positions," Blosser wrote.

The STU officials hope the exchange will continue "as long as the sun comes up in the sky," he noted.

After the morning meeting, the GC group attended a meeting with provincial education officials, who expressed similar enthusiasm for the program. An official celebration followed, including 2-1/2 hours of speeches and a two-hour, 18-course banquet.

On Oct. 15, the GC SST unit gave a reception for Chinese teachers of English who have studied at Goshen College through the exchange. The 13 Chinese teachers who attended reminisced about their Goshen experiences.

"They talked about what they had learned in class and out of class, on field trips, with their host families, in the dining hall, in faculty homes," Blosser wrote. "Many mentioned increased skills in teaching English, most referred to a much different understanding of life in America and a new self-confidence and courage to do new things in class."

The celebration closed Oct. 15 with a party put on by the GC and STU students. The Chinese students performed traditional Chinese dances and songs and GC students sang "The Happy Wanderer" and danced the Virginia Reel, "which the Chinese loved," the faculty leader wrote.

Blosser concluded, "I do not want to be naive, but I truly believe that GC can look with legitimate pride and satisfaction at the accomplishments of these 10 years . . . (the program) is an opportunity for educational exchange and mission that might have the effect of putting our convictions about faith into reality in the very best sense of the word."

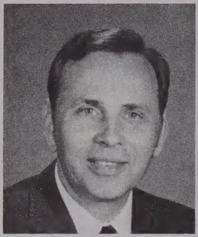
Sum and substance



Leaders need skills and ideas

By Victor Stoltzfus

Our ideal at Goshen College is for leadership to be every student's "second major." It has been so since 1894. Our alumni directory is a leadership directory. Thousands of our graduates are leaders in varied settings throughout North America and the world. Some are obvious leaders. Many provide the support and counsel that makes leadership possible for others.

The current student-body attitudes toward leadership are diverse. The public hostility of the '60s has disappeared. Student organizations such as student government, the student press and the Campus Activities Council now enjoy the support of some of our most able students. Students serve on the major faculty committees of the college. A few students are capable of generating a campus-wide movement. Our recycling program and Goshen's participation in the national march on behalf of the homeless are recent examples.

However, a yellow caution light about leadership remains as a part of campus culture. It draws from such varied sources as the secular Sixties and the piety of Mennonite humility theology. In the larger society the same caution light persists. It takes the form of diminished leaders and reluctant or destructively critical "followers."

Some students come to campus experienced in the basic skills of leading a committee meeting. Others must learn the most elementary forms of group process. Students are showing more interest in the administrative functioning of the college. The Student Central Committee has sponsored public forums with the administrative cabinet and the Board of Overseers.

This fall there was intense student interest in a lecture by consumer-advocate Ralph Nader. He linked himself to the spirit of the '60s by recounting his 19-year battle (and recent victory) with big corporations and the federal government on behalf of air bags in autos. He reflects the modern mood with his current passion to arouse citizen participation in issues that affect local communities.

The deans and faculty leaders are now proposing new programs that will work even more intentionally at leadership formation. Their ideas include: offering leadership opportunities to all first-year students in the colloquium classes; using more students in the convocation and chapel programs; teaching a unit on leadership during the Study-Service Term; achieving greater consistency in how the senior practicum prepares students for leadership in their professions, and a provision for documenting all leadership activities throughout a student's college career in the new Advising Handbook.

Another proposal is that we offer a special leadership course for leaders in student government, student media, in residence hall positions, international student mentors, lab assistants and other similar positions. We have not adopted an acronym for our new leadership activities but OAR, orientation/action/reflection is a possibility. It is the learning model of SST. After 20 years, this powerful model is now increasingly showing up on campus. Orientation refers to courses or workshops that prepare for a new experience. Action is the plunge into learning, whether study abroad or working on the school newspaper. Reflection is a careful review and interpretation of what happened with the aid of a faculty member.

With the help of grant support we are providing leadership internships as environmental education at Merry Lea Environmental Learning Center, the summer Ministry-Inquiry program in pastorates and laboratory-science research as Pew Scholars. In each case students have the opportunity to do significant work in an off-campus setting under the supervision of skilled mentors.

A student who participated in the Ministry-Inquiry program last summer wrote in her report, "Throughout the summer I saw many walks of life . . . a newborn infant, just hours old in an excited mother's arms . . . a man dealing with the pain of cancer . . . a woman on the edge of death . . . 20 youth excited about planning a church service . . . six hardworking, dedicated, and sometimes frustrated elders dealing with issues . . . 13 junior-high age kids dealing with the pressures of drugs . . . an excited young adult about ready to join the community of believers and me, preaching my first sermon . . . ."

Leaders live with the tension of expansive vision and limited resources. Leaders work at the intersection of dreams and structures. Robert K. Greenleaf writes, "Regardless of the stress of circumstances, institutions function better when the idea, the dream, is to the fore, and the person, the leader is seen as servant of the idea. . . . It is the communicated faith of the leader in the dream that enlists dedicated support. . . ."

Such a faith in ideas that transcend our own importance is a necessity when leaders run into controversy. Leaders derive their self-confidence not only from basic skills in thinking, writing and speaking but from causes worth the investment of a human life.

We now have a student generation more open to leadership than we have enjoyed since the mid-'60s. We must respect their caution but inspire them to address the significant issues with their full gifts and energy.

The next decade must enlarge its place for gifted women who are preparing now for more public and more responsible work. We must attract minorities to the important institutions of our time, especially those who can breath new hope into the bitter, alienated populations of American inner cities. Our calling as Christian educators is to nourish the spirit and enlarge the capacity of a generation of leaders of whom much will be required.
